Harsh penalty

The — The International Cricket Council (ICC) on Thursday announced that Bangladesh captain and all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan has been banned from all cricket for a period of two years, with the possibility of an extension, for breaching the ICC’s Anti-Corruption Code. But a complete rehabilitation process will be implemented for the cricketer. The decision was taken after the game accused of being involved in “capping” a player for an extended period of the series against New Zealand following the allegations of corruption in the game. It is the second instance of the sort in the history of the ICC. It must be mentioned that the ban will not affect Shakib Al Hasan’s ban for four years for corruption and that the rehabilitation process will be carried out by the ICC’s Anti-Corruption Unit. The ban extended to his Test and One-Day International (ODI) career. The ban also affects Shakib’s eligibility for the upcoming T20 World Cup in India.

Our cup of plastic woes is brimming over

A study has revealed that 82.4 per cent of India’s tap water is contaminated with microplastics. Of the 17 sampled cities, New Delhi had the most polluted water, with 94.6 per cent of samples containing microplastics. The study was conducted by researchers from the Centre for Science and Environment (CSE) and the Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU). They analyzed 17 major cities across India, including New Delhi, Mumbai, and Chennai. The researchers found that the level of microplastic contamination varied significantly across different cities, with New Delhi having the highest levels. The study highlights the urgent need for measures to reduce plastic pollution and improve water quality in India. The findings also underscore the importance of implementing effective waste management strategies to minimize plastic waste and protect water resources.

Raising awareness about wildlife through photography is an artist’s responsibility. Srikanth Mannepuri has taken it on himself to tell the world about the rare fauna in Telugu states through his picture perfect images, finds V SATEESH REDDY

Usually people who want to shoot photos of birds and animals visit various places in the country and some even travel to foreign countries. But not many know that they can find the world’s smallest cat, Rusty, and other rare animals and birds in Telugu states too, says Srikanth Mannepuri, a wildlife photographer and conservationist who researches wildlife and spreads awareness among forest officers about the dangers to wildlife habitats in the country. He also shares photos of rare birds and animals on social media with emphasis on the importance of wildlife.

Speaking to The Pioneer, Srikanth says, “During my graduation days, studying zoology in Kakinada, I worked with various NGOs saving eggs of birds and animals along seashores and cleaning up beaches. At that time the erstwhile Andhra Pradesh Forest Department started a project called EGREE (East Godavari River Estuarine Project). Forest officials used to get college students to participate in conservation initiatives like bird watching, wildlife photography, animal rescue and more. They taught us about the threats to wildlife and how to overcome them. This inspired me to start my research on wildlife and photography in 2014.”

Among the rare fauna he captured on film include fishing cat, smooth coated otter, Malabar pied hornbills, Indian skimmers, red-tailed pit viper, Indian pangolin and others. Currently, Srikanth is working with Anant Shankar and Nandini Salaria, DFOs from Rajamahendravaram and Kakinada on conservation activities. According to Srikanth, wildlife photographs should not be allowed to thrive without interference from human beings. He shares, “India is among the most biologically diverse nations. In Telugu states too we have a wonderful biodiversity of many rare species.”

He said that framing, perspective and story are key elements to get a good wildlife picture. Srikanth is also a state-level badminton player and he likes to draw cartoons. He shares, “My aim is to showcase the beauty of wildlife in the Telugu states on a global platform through my documentaries. I hope it will help in creating awareness on conservation of wildlife. I am planning to do a long-term study on fishing cats and smooth coated otters in Godavari mangroves. Telugu states have a wonderful biodiversity of many rare species.”
Can paracetamol safely curb major depressive symptoms?

A number of researchers are studying the potential of non-steroidal anti-inflammatory agents such as aspirin or paracetamol to curb the symptoms of major depression, doctors and drug companies have argued. According to Rajnish Kumar, Neuropsychiatrist, Paras Hospital in Gurgaon, usage of anti-inflammatory drugs for the treatment of depression is still controversial. “This isn’t news, but there is a growing body of research that shows that anti-inflammatory medicine like aspirin in low doses, can be effective in psychiatric illness like bipolar disorder,” Kumar told IANS.

For undertaking the study on the creative aspects of anti-inflammatory agents, researchers tried different databases for studies published up to January 2019. They found 30 relevant randomized controlled trials, involving 1,600 people, which reported changes in depression scales. They pooled the data from 10 of these studies. The study, published in the US in the Journal of Neurology, Neurosurgery and Psychiatry, suggested that anti-inflammatory agents were better than placebo and enhanced the effect of standard antidepressant treatment.

“The study claims that COX drugs like aspirin and ibuprofen can be used in depression treatment as they are non-invasive and reduce the risk of side effects,” said Tarun Sahni, Senior Consultant, Internal Medicine, Indraprastha Apollo Hospitals in Delhi. “The danger is that this may lead us to self-diagnosis of symptoms and therefore the risk of metabolic syndromes and therefore the risk of health issues will be substantially increased,” Kumar added.

However, Ruchit Garg, director of department of Neurology, Fortis Healthcare, Pune, told IANS that “anti-inflammatory medicine like aspirin in low doses can be effective in psychiatric illness, like bipolar disorder.

“In bipolar disorder, there is evidence of chronic inflammation and elevated pro-inflammatory cytokines. Aspirin, by its capacity to inhibit COX-1 enzyme, can reduce the inflammatory process in the brain. It down-regulates the brain’s cyclooxygenase-2 (COX-2) and (AA) and reduce neuroinflammation and amyotrophy of neurons,” Garg explained.

“They have found that aspirin rectifies the symptoms of depression and augments the effect of conventional antidepressants in major depressive disorder and is helpful in resistant cases,” Garg told IANS. “The doses of conventional medicines can be reduced and side effects like nausea, insomnia, and headache, which can be reported, can be reduced,” Garg concluded.

How good are women’s hygiene products?

Researchers have found that drinking coffee is associated with improved sports performance in both men and women. For the study, published in the Journal of Sports Sciences, the researchers from Coventry University in the UK picked 38 participants (19 men, 19 women) and found that drinking an caffeinated cup improves speed of cycling. Among the researchers, participants consumed coffee consumption for 12 hours before drinking either — coffee providing (3mg.kg minus one) of caffeine, a placebo in water or nothing as a control. In a 5 km cycling time trial following coffee ingestion, the performance of both men and women improved by approximately nine seconds and six seconds as compared with placebo and control, respectively.

No difference in performance was observed between the placebo and control. The study findings suggest that both men and women improved similarly to coffee and that its ingestion may be a practical source of caffeine prior to exercise for both genders.

The finding also contributed to the growing body of research that highlights the ergogenic benefit of coffee ingestion. To date, much of the research on this topic has focussed only on erythrocyte oxygen and carbon dioxide carriers and men, said the researchers.
