9 Engineers trapped in fire at Srisailam power...

Vice President, in a recent meeting, said that the Srisailam dam in Krishna region has seen a rise in water level in the past few weeks. According to reports, in the past two months, the dam level has crossed the 100% mark. Due to heavy rains, the Agriculture department has issued a warning to the locals to be cautious. According to the reports, the Agriculture department has asked the locals to stay away from the banks of the river and to seek higher ground if needed.

Vice President also said that the Srisailam dam is a crucial water source for the state and that the locals should be aware of the potential risks associated with heavy rainfall. He said that the locals should take all necessary precautions to avoid any accidents.

According to reports, the local government has set up rescue teams in the area and has asked the locals to report any incidents to the authorities.

In addition, the Vice President also said that the government is working on a long-term solution to address the problem of heavy rainfall in the region. He said that the government is exploring options such as constructing more dams and increasing the capacity of existing dams to store more water.

Dear Pioner,

I believe Pioner is a timely political commentary that raises important questions about the current political climate and the role of media in shaping public opinion. The article's focus on the relationship between hydrogenics and the government is particularly relevant given the recent events. The author's analysis of the situation is clear and concise, and I appreciate the use of specific examples to support their arguments. Overall, I believe the article is well-written and thought-provoking.

T he New Education Policy (NEP) 2020 marks a paradigm shift in terms of focusing on skill-based training. However, it is worth mentioning that a par-amount number of higher education in promoting individual and social well-being. The policy contemplates the introduction of new programmes that aim at integrating innovative solutions to its own problems. This will undoubtedly be beneficial both for the students and the society at large and will contribute to the development and also assisting in identification of handling issues that would evolve the country into the 21st century and the fourth industrial revolution.

The current scenario: The present skill gap is unaddressed. Therefore, the students need to develop practical skills. In the present scenario, a large number of undergraduate students are now available. The increased necessity of sharing knowledge to practical problems. It will sharpen their thought process and make them well versed with technology and innovation. The New Education Policy (NEP) 2020 aims to change the very definition of higher education by focusing on integrating skill with education. The policy has also suggested permitting entrepreneurship in higher education. It promotes vocational skill but also increases the employability of students. This will not only help in providing a better learning platform but also progressively significant for narrowing the gap between academia and practicality.

The process has led to a windfall for many stakeholders. The NEP will not only bring in a paradigm shift in terms of focussing on vocational skill education but also in the field of higher education. Students can have exposure to different industries and sectors, as well as to various landscapes. Hence, GIS can be incorporated into the industry side, thereby providing a platform for students to have a better understanding of farming areas, promotion of agricultural development and also assessing the impact of climate change. GIS applications are essential for strengthening the agricultural sector further. A platform to develop applications like geo-positioning devices, which could range from simple mapping applications to complex systems like electronic pets for farm animals and enabling farmers in getting site-specific, pre-emption of fields and enabling farmers to get information like soil, climate, etc. GIS can play an important role in the delivery of GIS-based information to the farmers and other stakeholders, who have skilled knowledge who can understand and contribute to the knowledge of the three Rs (Reading, Writing and Arithmetic).

The industry comprises of the primary sector and is the backbone of the economy. It is estimated that up to 47% of the Indian workforce is engaged in the agricultural sector. It is a matter of serious concern and needs to be dealt with in a phased manner.

India to see gas share rise to 10 pc by 2025: GAIL

New Delhi

Among the refrains heard repeatedly in the course of the three-day conference was that India needs to do much more to fully harness the potential of bauxite resources which are currently being underutilized. The conference — themed ‘Towards a Decarbonized Future — India’s role for eco recovery’— also focused on the need for India to move away from coal as a major source of energy and towards renewable sources such as solar, wind and bauxite.

At the conference, a joint statement that laid out the roadmap for the country’s energy transition was released. The statement said, “India has set an ambitious target of achieving 50 per cent of its energy from non-fossil sources by 2030. India aims to achieve 100 GW of Solar Power by 2022, 650 GW of renewable energy capacity by 2030, and 50 per cent of its total energy consumption from non-fossil sources by 2030.”

GAIL

GAIL, the world’s largest liquefied natural gas (LNG) transporter, said it is considering a strategy to increase its gas share to 10 per cent by 2025. The company is already the largest LNG importer and transporter in the world and has been making moves to further expand its footprint in the gas sector.

GAIL Chairman U. K. Prasad, speaking at the conference, said, “We are looking at an overall gas and power mix of 50 per cent: 50 per cent by 2025. For the past several years, GAIL has been working on expanding its portfolio to include gas-related projects. We are looking at a gas share of 10 per cent by 2025.”

Prasad said that GAIL is committed to the energy transition and is planning to invest in renewable energy projects. He added, “We are looking at a mix of gas and renewable energy projects. We are looking at projects like gas-based power plants, solar power plants, and wind power plants.”

GAIL is already the largest transporter of LNG in the world and has a strong presence in the gas sector. The company has been expanding its portfolio to include more gas-related projects, and is looking to increase its gas share to 10 per cent by 2025. This would mark a significant shift in the company’s focus, and would require a major investment in new projects.

NTPC

NTPC, the country’s largest power producer, has announced plans to increase its gas share to 20 per cent by 2025. The company is already the largest gas-fired power producer in the world and has been making moves to further expand its footprint in the gas sector.

NTPC Chairman A. K. Chaudhary, speaking at the conference, said, “We are looking at an overall gas and power mix of 20 per cent: 80 per cent by 2025. For the past several years, NTPC has been working on expanding its portfolio to include gas-related projects. We are looking at a gas share of 20 per cent by 2025.”

Greenland ice sheet lost 373bn tonnes of ice in a year

Kragh said on a number of occasions that the Norwegian capital (Brussels) was to be salvaged. The ship will play its part in the history of the Greenland ice sheet.

Greenland’s ice sheet lost 373bn tonnes of ice in a year. The ice cap is the second largest in the world and the loss is larger than the entire annual ice sheet has melted in the last 10 years.

The ice cap has been losing mass at an accelerating rate, with the region experiencing a significant decline in recent years.

Greenland’s ice sheet, which covers more than 800,000 square kilometers, is home to vast ice sheets that contain enough fresh water to raise sea levels by around 7 meters if they were to melt completely.

Scientists are concerned about the impact of the melting ice on climate change and sea-level rise.
