The Indian agriculture minister, Narendra Singh Tomar, said on Wednesday the Aam Aadmi Party (AAP) led government in New Delhi was not "enmity" towards the farmers after allegations were made that the government was trying to "defame" the farmers who have been protesting against the three agricultural laws for more than a year. The farmer leaders have said the government was trying to "defame" them by spreading "misinformation" about the farmers and their activities.

"The farmers have repeatedly said that the government was spreading misinformation about them, and now the government has admitted that it was spreading 'misinformation' about the farmers," Tomar said in a statement. "We will not allow such 'misinformation' to go unchallenged and will take all necessary steps to ensure that the farmers' voices are heard.

"The people of India have the right to know the truth, and the government will ensure that the truth is told," he added.

The government also said it was "cautiously optimistic" that talks with the farmers would continue and that a "mutually agreeable solution" could be reached. "We are committed to resolving the farmers' concerns and will continue to engage with them in a constructive manner," the statement said.

In response, the farmers' unions said they were "encouraged" by the government's commitment to "constructive engagement" and "amenable dialogue." They also said they were "optimistic" that a "mutually acceptable" solution could be reached.

The Central government has also announced additional support measures for the farmers, including a "farmers' loan waiver" scheme and a "fertilizer subsidy" scheme.

The farmers' unions have also warned that the government would not be able to "defame" them, and that the "truth will prevail.

The farmers' unions have been protesting against the three agricultural laws for more than a year, and their protests have been the largest in the country's history. The farmers have said the laws would make them "poorer" and "exploited," and that they would be "forced" to sell their produce at "discriminatory prices.

The farmers have also said the government was "exploiting" them and "exploiting" their "surplus" to the benefit of "big business.

The government has said it was "determined" to "resolve" the farmers' concerns and "address" their "grievances.

"We will continue to work with the farmers to find a "mutually agreeable" solution," the government said.

"We are committed to "listening to" the farmers' voices and "addressing" their concerns," it added.

The farmers' unions have also said they would continue to "protest" in Delhi and "continue" their "protests" in other parts of the country until their "demands" were "met.

"We will continue to "protest" until our "demands" are "met," the farmers' unions said.

"We will continue to "protest" until our "demands" are "met," they added.

SC allows homoeopathy for COVID-19 mitigation protocols, recognises their right to administer doses

It is a historic debate, about the efficacy of allopa-ly and homoeopathy in curing diseases. While the issue has been discussed and debated in the past, the US is yet to make a decision on this matter. In particular, COVID-19 is a severe and relentless virus where research is still ongoing to develop efficacious treatments. Globally, many countries are considering homoeopathy as a potential solution to this pandemic.

The scientific community, however, remains di-supportive of allopathic medicine. They argue that homoeopathy lacks robust evidence for its efficacy
in treating COVID-19. Despite this, the SC has allowed homoeopathy to be administered by homoeopathy practitioners, providing them with the necessary legal framework to treat COVID-19 patients.

In conclusion, the SC’s decision to allow homoeo-athy for COVID-19 treatment is a significant step forward in acknowledging the potential role of
