15 envoys’ J&K tour sparks row

Cong slams it as ‘guided tour’; MEA retorts allegations unfounded

THE TIMES OF INDIA NEW DELHI, FRIDAY, JANUARY 10, 2023, PAGE 16

Sacking VC not a silver bullet...HRC Secy; JNUSU adamant

Papri Dey

“Politically, it was an exercise in futility. The VC was selected by the collegium after a series of interviews. The president was not consulted. The JNUSU expressed its doubts, but it did not really matter. The whole process was a facade. It was a show of strength.”

A large group of student leaders and representatives of Kashmiri students have accused the government of organizing a guided tour of the territory on a different date from when they were invited to visit. The指导意见 is a clear indication of the government’s intention to control the narrative and prevent any independent assessment of the situation.

The tour was organized by the Ministry of External Affairs to show the world that the situation in Kashmir is peaceful and stable, despite the ongoing protests and demonstrations. However, the opposition and Kashmiri students have criticized the tour as a propaganda exercise, and have called for a transparent and fair assessment of the situation.

The Kashmiri students have also called for the abolition of Article 370, which grants special status to the region, and for the release of all political detainees. They have also demanded the restoration of internet and communication services, which have been shut down for more than a year.

The government has responded by saying that the Article 370 is a internal matter and that the沌rend of the Kashmiri students as a whole is peaceful and stable. The government has also tried to portray the Kashmiri students as stooges of foreign influences.

The JNUSU has called for a boycott of the tour, and has urged the students to continue their struggle for freedom. They have also called for a nationwide protest to raise awareness about the situation in Kashmir.

Don’t be a silent tool

Incidents at JNU have cast a shadow on the integrity of the police force. It’s high time Delhi Police restores confidence not to the Government but to the rule of law.

Ajoy Kumar

T he modern police force (some would say the ‘terrorist police’) is often assumed to have been reformed, yet the prevailing mentality on home soil, continue to be under detention for their fear that their stated positions on protective status for the Valley would now amount to incitement. And without an end to the fear of the numerous restrictions and to the violence that comes with it, to say, a political contest on opinions and student protests over the same has made it somewhat desperate for some good hunting. So while the Government of this country seems to be on the lookout for a ‘national’ policy, the JNU students are to be forced to carry on as a ‘national’ policy, the JNU students are to be forced to carry on without a chance to discuss the issues of concern to them. And without a chance to discuss the issues of concern to them.

The JNU incident is a case in point. How can the police force be reined in so that the police force is not able to intercede and make the things happen. As per eye witness accounts, the police force is allowed to stop the demonstrations and violence when people are protesting. Hence, the police force, the police force to know that the first thing the police should do is to take care of the situation. It boggles our minds and outrages us why the BJP is setting the agenda for the state and society and makes it difficult for the police force to know that the first thing the police should do is to take care of the situation. A proposal by the Ministry of Women and Children Development (MINAWCD) to amend the Child Marriage Act in 2006, to render all underaged marriages void, is being opposed by child rights activists.

PROFESSOR MREDIKA

The Child Marriage Act, 2006, is a law that seeks to regulate and prevent marriages below a certain age. It was passed in response to widespread concerns about the social and economic implications of early marriage. The law sets a minimum age for marriage, which is 18 years for girls and 21 years for boys. However, there are exemptions for those who marry with the consent of their parents or guardians.

The law also provides for penalties for those who violate its provisions. It is enforced by various government agencies, including the police, social workers, and religious leaders. The non-compliance of the law has led to its widespread violation in many regions of the country.

The amendment being proposed by the MINAWCD seeks to further regulate and control the underaged marriages. It would make the marriage of underaged girls (below 18 years) and boys (below 21 years) voidable. The amendment would also extend the jurisdiction of the law to include cases of marriage under duress, where the girl or boy is married against their will.

The amendment would also allow for the nullification of marriages that were performed before the girl or boy reached the legal age of marriage. The nullification would be effective from the date of the marriage, and the marriage would be treated as if it never took place.

The amendment would also provide for the protection of underaged girls and boys who are married under duress. The law would enable them to seek legal remedies and protection from the courts.

The proposal has been met with mixed reactions. While some child rights activists and organizations support the amendment, others have criticized it for being too stringent and not taking into account the cultural and social factors that influence early marriage.

Despite the criticisms, the MINAWCD is committed to enforcing the law and ensuring that underaged marriages are not performed. The proposal is currently before the government, and once approved, it would become law and be enforced by the relevant authorities.

The amendment is a significant step in the fight against underaged marriage in the country. It is hoped that it will help to reduce the prevalence of early marriage and protect the rights of underaged girls and boys.

The proposal is expected to be debated in the parliament in the near future.

US, Iran step back from the brink; region still on edge

WASHINGTON: The US and Iran were only a step away from possible war on Wednesday as both sides implied they were ready for military retaliation, but global efforts to de-escalate the conflict. US President Donald Trump strongly denied that he had ordered a strike, but Iran announced it had responded to a US drone attack by killing the architect of its regional military operations.

During a news conference at the White House, Trump said he had not ordered a military strike against Iran.

Friday’s attack left a strong possibility of war.

This past week I spent a painfully short amount of time at the Consumer Electronics Show (CES)
in Las Vegas. And I got my birthday gift which is a Tesla.

I was10 years old at the time of the launch of the Tesla,
and I honestly believe that it is the best car that has ever been made. Tesla is not just a car, it is a technological marvel.

It was a very emotional moment for me. I was surrounded by people who had been waiting for years to get their hands on a Tesla.

It was a dream come true.

For the first time, I got to drive a Tesla, and I was proud of myself for buying it.

I don’t think much about electric cars, but I know that they are the future.

One of the biggest differences between electric cars and conventional cars is that they are silent. People are more likely to buy
an electric car if it is silent.

The interior of the Tesla is beautiful and modern.

I think that the Tesla is
the future of transportation.

I would love to own one someday.

The Tesla is
an amazing car.

I think that the future is now.

I am excited to see what tech will bring next.

I want to be a part of this exciting world.

I am looking forward to more Tesla
drives.

"I knew I had to get myself up in the second set," Williams said. "I'm glad to be in the next round."
