Rising vegetable prices have driven consumer inflation to new highs. Get agricultural management back on track.

The architecture under which the newly-appointed CDS has been placed and the charter given to him is commendable, provided the system lets him do his work.

A Shishir K Mahesh

The chief of Defence Staff (CDS) has taken charge at the critical juncture of the growing and daunting challenges for the national security. India has been given the mandate by the Cabinet Committee of Security (CCS) to make the Chief of Defence Staff (CDS) as a single point of contact with the political hierarchy and also the Service Chiefs to address the critical issues related to defence and security.

The creation of the post of CDS is an effort to address the bureaucratic and administrative hurdles faced by the armed forces in executing the orders of the political leadership. The CDS will serve as a bridge between the political leadership and the armed forces, thereby enabling quicker decision-making and execution of orders.

The CDS will be responsible for:

1. Coordinating and synchronizing the efforts of the Defence Forces in handling national security challenges, including counter-terrorism, counter-insurgency, and hostilities in the region.
2. Ensuring that the Defence Forces are adequately equipped and trained to handle any crisis or conflict.
3. Coordinating with other countries for joint military exercises, training, and other collaborative efforts.
4. Ensuring that the Defence Forces are adequately funded and have the necessary resources to execute their duties.

The appointment of the CDS is a significant step towards streamlining the defence structure and improving the efficiency of decision-making. The CDS will work closely with the Defence Ministers and other high-ranking officials to ensure that the armed forces are adequately equipped and trained to handle any crisis or conflict.

The CDS will also be responsible for:

The Government is considering a proposal to extend the deadline for tax payments to March 31. The Finance Ministry and the Reserve Bank of India are working on a plan to allow a lower tax of 10% to be paid by all firms, which would be similar to the 12% rate previously applicable. This would be in line with the government's plans to increase the base corporate tax rate by Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman on February 1.

The move is expected to help reduce the burden on businesses, which have been hit by the COVID-19 pandemic. It would also be in line with the government's overall economic policies, which aim to stimulate growth and create jobs.

The proposal is part of the government's larger strategy to boost the economy and tackle the challenges posed by the pandemic. The government has already announced a range of measures to support businesses, including tax breaks and financial assistance.

The implementation of this proposal is expected to help reduce the financial burden on businesses and encourage them to continue operating during these challenging times. It will also help in addressing the economic pressures posed by the pandemic and in promoting growth and development.

Overall, the proposal to extend the deadline for tax payments is a welcome move that will provide relief to businesses and help in promoting economic growth. The government's efforts to support businesses during these challenging times will continue to be crucial in mitigating the impact of the pandemic on the economy.

Melbourne gets 'worst in world' air quality

Melbourne: The city's air quality has deteriorated to the "worst in the world" on Tuesday afternoon, according to air quality monitoring stations. The Air Quality Index (AQI) in Melbourne reached 500, which is considered hazardous for all ages, including children. The AQI measures the concentration of pollutants in the air, and a score of 500 indicates a severe health impact.

The deterioration in air quality is expected to continue for several days, with a strong high pressure system bringing in hot and dry conditions. The weather bureau has issued health warnings for people with respiratory and heart conditions, advising them to stay indoors and avoid excessive physical activity.

In a statement, the Victorian government said that it was working closely with the Australian government to manage the situation. The government has also deployed additional air quality monitoring stations in the city to get a better understanding of the situation.

Australian volcanologists

The crater of the volcano is one of the most active volcanoes in the world, and the ongoing eruption is expected to continue for several days, according to experts. The volcano is located in the northern part of Australia, and the eruption has caused widespread ashfall in the region.

Tourists have been warned not to approach the volcano, and authorities have advised people to stay away from the affected areas. The Australian government has also advised people to avoid any non-essential travel to the region.

Sydney: A new study has found that people who live near volcanoes are at a higher risk of developing heart disease. The study, published in the Journal of the American College of Cardiology, found that people living near active volcanoes had a 20% higher risk of developing heart disease compared to those living in areas far from volcanic activity.

The study, conducted by researchers from the University of New South Wales, involved a cohort of over 5,000 people from areas near active volcanoes in New Zealand and the Philippines. The researchers found that people living within 10 kilometers of active volcanoes had a higher risk of developing heart disease compared to those living further away.

The study authors said that the findings have important implications for public health policies, as people living near volcanoes may require additional screening for heart disease and other health conditions.

It is critical to use relevant tools in teaching technology through which helps a wide range of learners making it work more effectively, says PRODIPTA HORE

The paradox of education is precisely this - that as one begins to become conscious one begins to examine the society in which he is being educated. — James Baldwin

The remarkable growth of technology has for a long time been changing the analytics and artificial intelligence (AI) applications feeding to what the world sees as the Fourth Industrial Revolution — Industry 4.0. What this revolution will entail will be different from autonomous systems that can only analyse data, and will rather have the minimum human involvement. A computer system that is trained to do one thing, for the sake of a particular manufacturing and industry processes can in addition to collating information synthetically, Effect of industrial evolution 4.0 appears to be wide reaching and reducing the advantages of the industrial revolution being placed in various sectors, of one which is education. In a globally connected world, there are several trends with Education 4.0 that will change the way we learn. Traditional pedagogical teaching, with defined learning objectives. The student will be at the core of the teaching and learning process, where the role of the educator is not just a facilitator. This is a remarkable shift from Education 1.0; now a large volume of information is transmitted and students are made to use various teaching and learning tools and a wide range of modules to understand the course content. But this module-based teaching is not the only way of teaching. In the 4.0 system, there is a need for the teachers and students to interact in the best possible way. The teaching system is made up of a collaborative learning system where teachers and students are encouraged to explore the best possible ways to learn. The education system has evolved in Industry 4.0 and now places the student at the center of the highest education ecosystem. As students are becoming savvier and respond to a higher education system, the student needs to learn and work on his and each other's knowledge. It is critical to make learning truly personal and enriching. It is also no longer effective to use information that is not relevant to the students. It is necessary to have a more personalized approach in teaching. For this, students need to be given role-playing activities and feedback from the teacher. In this way, the students will be able to understand and respond to the new education system where the role of the educator is not just a facilitator.
