Miffed allied and federal parties stay away from its meet on CAA-NRC, unlikely to yield the Opposition space

B Alterations in leadership - A fresh start it is supposed to be for the face of Opposition. Yet if widespread and continued protests over the contentious citizenship law and a proposed National Register of Citizens (NRC) are any indication, then students and civil society have clearly fed up with the talk of the Opposition's intent.

The Centre's sit-in protest, in which leaders from political parties took part, has been going on for over a week. But amidst the pro-democracy protests and nationwide shutdowns, the party has failed to secure any significant concessions from the government. The lack of coordination among the Opposition parties has left many struggling to find a common ground.

The Congress, for some reason seems to be falling into an arranged spectacle of its national leadership of the opposition, expecting all federal parties to get under the national umbrella of its national leadership.

It is all about politics and the power. The Centre and the Opposition need to stop playing the role of a Hollywood epic and start focusing on the real issues at hand.

Independent Sikh faces first year in Saudi jail on charges of terrorism, leaders and the people. The former is the son of a Sikh farmer and was arrested in 2018.

This is why people of all faiths and communities support the Congress, which has been in power for so long. It has proven itself to be in close touch with the people and their problems and has always worked towards finding solutions.

The jail term for Jangda is a sad reminder that despite all the progress made in recent times, there is still much work to be done to promote peace and understanding in this world.

The loss of leadership — It is unfortunate that in their greed for money and power, leaders have forgotten the values as preached by our forefathers. Roots of social cohesion and religious amity have been weakened.

It is important that leaders take responsibility for their actions and work towards creating a better future for all.

Walmart's decision to lay off senior executives is a sign of economic slow-down. It is indeed time to do with wits that we have.

The news that American retail giant Walmart has laid off 60 senior level executives from its corporate headquarters in Gurugram has sent shockwaves through the economy with its implications.

The firing of the top executives is a just a further confirmation that the Indian economy is in a turbulent phase. The news that British telecom giant Vodafone is planning to pull out operations in the country is the cherry on the cake, something that would please the headlines in the Finance Ministry. But the situation is much worse than it appears.

The nation's economic growth over the past few years has been disappointing. The government has not been able to create enough jobs or bring about significant reforms to boost the economy.

The report of the America-based investment giant, Fitch Ratings has predicted a negative outlook to the Indian economy for the year 2020.

lack of availability of charging infrastructure is a major impediment to the growth of electric vehicles (EVs). Across the globe, including India, millions of EVs are currently being sold, but the majority of these are in urban areas where the lack of charging infrastructure is a significant barrier. EVs are a promising technology to address the challenge of climate change, but their widespread adoption requires significant investments in infrastructure.

In India, the government has taken several steps to encourage the adoption of EVs. These include the introduction of electric two-wheelers (E2Ws) and electric three-wheelers (E3Ws) to create a market for EVs. However, the unabsorbed input tax credit (ITC) is a significant concern for the manufacturers of these vehicles. The ITC is the amount of tax paid on goods and services that can be deducted from the tax liability on future sales. When the ITC is not absorbed, it leads to a lack of cash flow and can result in the shutdown of manufacturing units.

The unabsorbed ITC on EVs is a major concern for manufacturers, as it affects their ability to invest in research and development, and to expand their production capacity. The lack of adequate charging infrastructure is a barrier to the widespread adoption of EVs, and the government needs to address this issue to ensure the growth of the EV market.

In conclusion, the unabsorbed ITC on EVs is a significant concern for manufacturers in India. The government needs to address this issue to ensure the growth of the EV market and to meet its climate change goals.

Proposed concession changes inadequate to revive pv sector

India Ratings and Research (IIR) on Monday said that proposed changes in the concession schemes for solar photovoltaic (PV) projects are inadequate, and that a fresh setup or amendment to the project agreements would be required. In this context, the report refered to the Ministry of New and Renewable Energy (MNRE)’s proposed changes in the feed-in tariff (FiT) and purchase agreements for solar power projects. The notification was prepared in consultation with India Ratings and Research (IIR), and was released on December 10.

IIR said that the recent changes proposed by the Ministry of New and Renewable Energy (MNRE) are inadequate to address the financial stress faced by the solar sector. The changes are expected to remain inadequate as the current concession arrangements for solar PV projects have many shortcomings. The report added that the key challenges faced by the solar sector are higher capital costs, lower demand, and lower than expected tariffs.

IIR noted that the Ministry’s changes are based on the assumption that the solar sector can be improved by addressing only the financial aspects. However, the report said that the sector faces many other challenges, including a lack of access to finance, regulatory uncertainty, and grid integration issues.

IIR said that while the current FiT and purchase agreements are designed to attract investment in the solar sector, they have not been effective in doing so. The report added that the current FiT and purchase agreements do not adequately address the risks faced by solar project developers, which makes it difficult for them to raise funds for projects.

The report said that the current FiT and purchase agreements are not aligned with the current market conditions, and that they need to be revised to reflect the current market conditions. The report added that the current FiT and purchase agreements do not adequately address the risks faced by solar project developers, which makes it difficult for them to raise funds for projects.

IIR suggested that the government consider revising the concession arrangements for solar PV projects to include the following measures:

- A more realistic and market-oriented FiT
- A more robust and transparent process for the allocation of solar projects
- A more predictable and stable regulatory environment
- A more effective and transparent process for the resolution of disputes

The report added that the government should also consider introducing new incentives to encourage investment in the solar sector. The report said that the current incentives are not sufficient to attract investment in the solar sector, and that the government should consider introducing new incentives to encourage investment in the solar sector.

Tollywood: A film industry that has always followed the policy of bigger is better.

Be it the budget, the cast, or the location. However, the times are changing, and ANUSKA PRADEEP explores how film industries are becoming more content driven and less budget oriented.

HITTING THE ROAD FOR FARMERS

Farms outside something to be feared. The fact that a harvest is something that can go through a tough time, resulting in a crop failure and unhappy farmers is something that we need to address. However, this has never been easy for farmers. They are not even getting minimum support price for their crops, leading to a decrease in their income. The way forward is to create awareness among people on various issues, such as dowry harassment, domestic violence, and more, and find solutions.

Phanindra Kumar is doing solo runs to get minimum support price for farmers, and to create awareness among people on various issues.

Phanindra, a farmer from Krishna district S, has always followed the policy that is content driven andmatter, has always been doing solo runs to create awareness among people on various issues, such as dowry harassment, domestic violence, and more, and find solutions.

No moolah? No problem, now, content is the king.

While quite a few low-budget Bollywood movies like Aaja Nachle, Taare Zameen Par, and others have already created a stir in the industry, Tollywood has also had its share of low-budget movies that have made it big. For instance, Arjun Reddy was created at a budget of Rs 1.5 crore, but went on to gross over Rs 50 crore.

Budget is not a limitation for filmmakers to create and publicize their story as long as the content is good. More and more novelists are very thoughtful and smart with their stories and have evolved with the arrival of OTT platforms which has created a new content. From the petals of storytelling, the audience has more scope to create and publicize their story as long as the content is good.

Conclusion:

As the film industry moves towards content-driven narratives, it is crucial for filmmakers to prioritize storytelling and content over external factors like budget. The journey to success is not easy, and it requires hard work, dedication, and a strong will to overcome obstacles. With the rise of OTT platforms, filmmakers have more opportunities to create and publicize their stories, making it possible for stories with unique perspectives to reach wider audiences.
