People's prince

When Britain's Prince Harry married Meghan Markle, there was a feeling that Britain had selected a new bride. Meghan, who has a background in the entertainment industry, had already made the transition from tradition to modernity, casting off the regal aura of the British Royal family. She was a cultural icon, a symbol of modernity, and a woman who could appeal to a younger generation.

Meghan's star power and her brand ambassadorship that Britain could not and still cannot ignore, using it as a tool to counter the decline of traditional values, brands, and the subsidiary economy of memorable and lifestyle-markers. By deciding to step back as “senior members of the royal family”, removing some of the royal titles that she and her husband, Prince Harry, had been given by the Queen, Elizabeth II, the couple has sought to create a new identity for themselves.

The idea is to prove that people can make their own way in the world, that there are other paths to success and fulfillment, that not everything has to be predetermined by one's birthright. The couple's decision to step back is a bold move, one that challenges the traditional power structures and opens up new possibilities for others who want to carve their own path.

In a relief to Kashmiri, apex court says it will review restricted orders and internet banda in a week.

The Supreme Court has ordered the government to review restricted orders and internet banda in a week. The apex court was hearing a writ petition filed by a Kashmiri lawyer seeking to strike down the restrictions.

The court observed that the restrictions, which were imposed in Kashmir following the scrapping of the special status for the region, had been poorly executed and had led to a loss of confidence in the democratic process. The court noted that the restrictions had led to a loss of confidence in the democratic process and had resulted in a loss of trust in the government.

The court also noted that the restrictions had led to a loss of confidence in the democratic process and had resulted in a loss of trust in the government. The court observed that the restrictions had been imposed in a haphazard manner and had not been properly enforced.

In today’s world, the internet is the linchpin of society and communication. It not only enables unbridled access to information and communication with a user-friendly interface but also provides a channel to generate, broadcast and disseminate information within seconds to any point. Consequently, it has drastically transformed the political, economic and social landscape.

However, in the wake of the rapid expansion of the internet, there has been a significant increase in the number of instances where internet shutdowns have been imposed. This is particularly evident in countries with authoritarian governance. The recent torrent of internet shutdowns in India is a stark reminder of this.

The shutdown, which began on August 5, 2019, was imposed by the Indian government to prevent the spread of what it described as “misinformation” and “propaganda.” However, the shutdown was widely criticized for its disproportionate impact on the internet’s usefulness in providing access to information and communication.

The shutdown has been extended multiple times, and as of this writing, it remains in effect. This has raised serious concerns about the implications of such actions on the internet’s role in facilitating knowledge and innovation.

The internet’s role in providing access to information and communication is crucial in promoting social and economic development. It is a tool for bridging the digital divide and fostering inclusion. However, the shutdowns in India have severely undermined these goals.

The shutdown has implications for businesses, as it curtails access to the internet for their employees, clients, and customers. This has necessitated them to adopt alternative means of communication, which can be time-consuming and costly.

Moreover, the shutdown has implications for education, as it restricts access to online learning resources and forces students to rely on traditional methods of learning.

In conclusion, the internet shutdown in India is a significant concern that requires urgent attention. It is imperative that the Indian government and other stakeholders work towards ensuring a free and open internet that can serve as a powerful tool for promoting development and progress.
India's oil demand growth to outpace Asia by mid-2020s: IEA

The International Energy Agency (IEA) said on Friday that Indian oil demand growth was likely to be lower than that of Asia, including China, in the mid-2020s, and pointed to a wider disparity between the two giants in the coming decades.

Speaking to reporters after a briefing, IEA's head said oil demand growth in India and China was likely to be significantly lower than that of other emerging markets. The Indian market had been “cooling” for some time, he said.

“India's market is at a much earlier stage of development, and therefore the growth rate is much lower than that of China,” he said.

The agency projected India's oil demand growth to reach 6 million barrels per day (bpd) by 2024, compared to 10 million bpd in China.

The Indian market demand growth is likely to be slower than that of China in the mid-2020s, the 30-year-old envoy said.

In the second phase, similar manoeuvres are planned for Chandibeli and Padma in Khulna and Barishal in the south.

“I think the current cap is too high,” said the envoy. “At the growing demand, this is only increasing. I do not want to give a specific number to what India wants to import, but this is a positive signal.”

India, however, is looking at having a 100 per cent participation in the rest of the world, he added.

The envoy said he was looking at how we'd like to see the second phase of the US-IWT, looking at how we'd like to see the US market evolve, including the US market scenario.

Are OSCARS the ultimate achievement? Does it bother filmmakers that the Academy has largely ignored Indian cinema over the years? SIDDHESH SUMAN finds out what it takes to get Oscar-worthy Indian films that the Academy and expert committees failed to recognize.

The Oscar is a mark of quality in filmmaking. There are a lot of films that are Oscar-worthy, but they don't make it to the shortlist. Even if a film makes it to the shortlist, it doesn't mean that it will get a nomination. There are several panels and committees that make the final decision, and the process is quite complex. It's not easy to make it to the Oscars.

The Academy Awards are held every year in Los Angeles, California, to honor the best films of the previous year. The winners are announced in February, and the ceremony is held in April. The Oscars are watched by millions of people around the world, and they are considered one of the most prestigious awards in the film industry.
