A Special Director in the Enforcement Directorate, who is a member of the Home Ministry's inter-ministerial team. "The Ministry of Home Affairs has set up an inter-ministerial committee to continue discussions with the Chinese side on the remaining issues," the spokesperson said.

The spokesperson said a Special Task Force of the Indian Police Service, with the help of the Chinese and Indian Army, cleared the area from the Chinese side and showed the Chinese side that the area was already cleared of Chinese troops and was under Indian control.

On Tuesday, the withdrawal at the LAC in the Galwan Valley was completed. The Chinese and Indian troops were rapidly disengaging from all the areas, with both sides making rapid progress towards a complete disengagement.

The withdrawal was part of a wider agreement reached between India and China in May 2021. As part of this agreement, both sides agreed to withdraw their troops from the areas where they had been mutually engaged since June 2020.

The withdrawal was welcomed by the Indian government, which described it as a positive step towards improving relations between the two countries. The Chinese government, however, did not comment on the withdrawal.

The withdrawal also came as part of a broader effort by both countries to resolve their differences through diplomatic channels. In recent years, the two countries have repeatedly engaged in border disputes, and a stand-off in June 2020 had led to the death of several Indian soldiers.

In addition to the border issues, the two countries also have differences over the status of Kashmir, with India claiming it as its territory and Pakistan maintaining it is an occupied territory.

Both sides have expressed a desire to improve their relations, and the withdrawal is seen as a step towards achieving this goal. However, the full implications of the withdrawal and its impact on the region remain to be seen.

The India Meteorological Department (IMD) on Wednesday said that a monsoon trough was likely to hit north India for the next 24 hours.

The trough, which is currently north of the Himalayas, is likely to slide over Himachal Pradesh in the next 24 hours. The department predicted that the trough would move southwards over the northern plains, leading to widespread showers and thunderstorms in many parts of the region.

According to the IMD, the trough is expected to bring light to moderate rainfall in parts of Himachal Pradesh, Punjab, Haryana, and the northwest regions of Uttar Pradesh and Rajasthan. In the west, the trough is likely to bring showers and thunderstorms in Marathwada, Madhya Pradesh, and coastal Karnataka.

The trough is also expected to bring widespread showers and thunderstorms in the north, including parts of Uttar Pradesh, Uttarakhand, and northern Rajasthan.

The IMD warned that the trough could lead to flash floods in some areas, and advised people to remain vigilant and take necessary precautions.

Meanwhile, the IMD issued a red alert for Himachal Pradesh and Uttarakhand, advising them to be prepared for heavy rainfall and potential flash floods.

The agency also predicted that the trough would bring moderate rainfall in the western parts of Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh, and light to moderate rainfall in parts of Maharashtra and Gujarat.

The IMD urged people to remain cautious and take necessary precautions to avoid any loss of life or property due to the monsoon trough's impact.

In isolation, we are able to do our smartest thinking and yield a harvest of our best ideas. It is only when you view the world from a distance that you see it all whole and understand it better. This may not be the way to produce a masterpiece of art or music, or to write a great novel, or to build a business. But it is the way in which we can most effectively think, because we can see all the parts of a problem at once, and all the implications of any given solution. This is true of any complex problem, whether it is a scientific problem, a political problem, a social problem, or a personal problem. And it is true of any complex system, whether it is a biological system, a social system, a economic system, or a psychological system. The key to solving any complex problem is to see it as a whole, and to understand all the implications of any given solution.

China slams US move

China on Wednesday said it was pulling out of the World Health Organization (WHO) as a consequence of years of US attacks on the body, which it said were designed to politically misuse the global health body despite its contribution to pandemic control.

US formally notifies UN of withdrawal from WHO

Washington: The US has formally notified UN of withdrawal from WHO for the second time in a day, the US Mission to the UN said Wednesday, saying its decision was not against the WHO but against its “anti-China” policies.

The US had already withdrawn from the WHO on May 31 after President Donald Trump abruptly said he would withdraw. The US joined China in formally notifying UN Wednesday.

On Wednesday, the US said it would withdraw from the WHO, which it said had become a “tool” of the anti-China bloc.

US President Donald Trump, who was served with legal papers in May for withdrawing from the WHO, had said the US “wouldn’t pay” for the $4.5 billion annual cost of membership to the WHO.

The US move comes as the WHO is responsible for running a global vaccination drive to contain the coronavirus pandemic.

In response, China said it was “deeply disappointed” with the US’s decision, which was “against the trend of the times”.

In a statement, the Chinese Embassy in the US said it was “deeply disappointed” with the US’s withdrawal from WHO.

“It is a pity that the US government's repeatedly unilateral and non-cooperative actions undermine the global health security and the principles of multilateralism,” the Chinese Embassy said.

US cmdr. promises to fix vaccine delivery issues

US military chief Mark Milley promised Wednesday to fix delivery issues that have delayed the roll-out of vaccines in the US, after widespread criticism of the government’s handling of vaccine distribution.

US military commander Mark Milley said Wednesday he was “taking a fresh look” at the distribution of vaccines in the US. (PTI)

“My job is to take charge of the medical force and make sure that we have the force that we need to be ready to fight,” Milley told a press conference.

“[The] US military has a historic responsibility to defend the nation and the people both within the country and around the world,” he said.

US president denies threat of military action

President Donald Trump on Wednesday denied reports that the US was planning to use military force to secure the release of prisoners held in Iran.

The White House had previously declined to rule out any action, days after the US killed the top Iranian commander Qassem Soleimani in a drone strike in January.
