10-DAY LOCKDOWN IN PEDDAPALLI

PNS PEDDAPALLI

Following rise in number of positive cases in the state, the officials of Peddapalli municipality have decided to observe 10-day lockdown in the town beginning Monday. The deci-sion was taken at a meeting of municipal councillors held here on Sunday to check the spread of the virus.

The meeting was organised following the death of a person in the district hospital on Sunday. The municipal officials and councillors, who ruled in favour of observing a lockdown voluntarily, opined that the spread of the virus can be checked by observing the lockdown for 10 days. The meeting decided to allow traders to sell vegetables and other essential commodities daily for a few hours. The officials have asked the people of the district headquarters town to confine to their homes and observe self regulation.

It may be recalled that following rise in number of Corona positive cases in the state, many towns are going for self-imposed lockdown. Imposing self lockdown curfew on the market, traders and vendors in the towns have decided to run their businesses between a scheduled time. The measure was taken to curb the spread of Covid in densely packed areas. Already many villages across the state opted for self- imposed lockdown.

Devarakonda declared selfimposed lockdown due to rise in number of Corona positive cases. In Vikarabad district, shop owners, hotels, dhabhas and others in Peddemul mandal headquarters have decided to close their shops voluntar-ily for one week. # Let States not transgress into defence matters

The makers of our Constitution were indeed visionaries! Their prescient minds could perceive the future obstacles that the country would have to face. They were also aware that as the democracy matures, people would become more and more enlightened about their rights and will demand, albeit through their elected leaders, their share of cake. Undoubtedly, in order to avoid any confusion or friction between the Union and the States, the Constitution provides three exhaustive lists of subjects which would fall within the purview of the Union, States and both. Thus, there is a clear-cut demarcation of the authority which could be exercised in certain matters by the Union and the States individually or jointly.

The first list forming part of the Constitution covers subjects like defence, foreign affairs, currency and coinage, war and peace, atomic energy, national resources, railways, posts, citizenship, navigation and shipping, foreign trade, inter-state trade and commerce, banking, insurance, national highway, sensors, elections, institutions of higher education etc., totally in all 97 subjects. Similarly, the State list encompasses 66 subjects in which each state legislature can legislate and such laws would operate within the territory of each state. The main subjects of the State list are: police, public order, prisons, state court fees, local government, public health and sanitation, hospitals, liquors, libraries, agriculture, animal husbandry, water supply, irrigation, and canals, fisheries etc. Besides, there is a Concurrent list containing 52 subjects on which both the Union and the States can make laws. The main subjects in this list are: criminal law, criminal procedure, preventive detention, marriage and divorce, transfer of property other than agricultural land, trust and ustees etc.

Thus, even a lay man can Uttar understand that in matters of defence, national security and citizenship, among others, only Parliament can pass laws and the same shall be enforced by the central government. Therefore, in this critical period, when the nation is facing threats from three quarters namely COVID-19 pandemic, Sino-Pak war threats and Tukde-Tukde gang within the country, the Opposition would do service to the nation by at heinous. least keeping mum if it cannot

SC on sale considereation In a recent judgment, the Supreme Court has held that

A division bench comprising Justice L.Nageshwar Rao and Justice Indu Malhotra, while considering an appeal filed against an order of the Gujarat High Court held: "Even if the whole of the price is not paid, much of the document is executed, and thereafter register, the sale would be complete and the title would pass all to the transferee under the transaction. "There is a need to prioritise our efforts in increasing the recovery percentage and creating confidence among people that Coronavirus is just like any other virus and not to panic," said BVS Kumar, former State Committee Member, IRCS. In a statement here on Sunday, he said that the known fact that fear and tension in an effected person will minimise the immunity levels to combat the virus. To improve the recovery rate and reduce the Covid-19 deaths, there is a dire need to make available the Convalescent Plasma to the patients. Convalescent Plasma is nothing but the plasma taken from a person, who is a Covid-19 winner.

He says that as the availability of an effective vaccine for this virus is not in sight, only the use of Convalescent Plasma is the only way to reduce the deaths. Kumar said that at present only one Plasma Bank was set up by Institute of Liver and Biliary Sciences in Delhi.

Varavara Rao's kin demand his release

PNS WARANGAL

The family of the arrested poet and activist Varavara Rao on Sunday demanded his immediate release by stating that his health condition is deteriorating fast and that the state is trying to kill him in jail. In a release, Hemalatha, wife of the poet and daughters --Sahaja, Anala and Pavana expressed serious concern over the health condition of the poet. The statement mentioned that the entire family was worried about the deteriorating health of the jailed poet

The statement maintained that the health condition of Varavara has been scary for over six weeks now, ever since he was shifted in an unconscious state to JJ Hospital from Taloja Jail on May 28, 2020. Even as he was discharged from the hospital and sent back to jail three days later, there has been no improvement in his health and he is still in need of emergency heathcare, it detailed. The familv members sav that the immediate cause of concern now was that they were very much perturbed at the routine phone call they received from Varavara on Saturday evening.

"Though the earlier two calls on June 24 and July 2 were also worrying with his weak and muffled voice, incoherent speech and abruptly jumping into Hindi. As an eloquent and articulate public speaker and writer in Telugu for over five decades, a Telugu teacher for four decades and known for his meticulous memory, this fumbling, incoherence and loss of memory were in themselves strange and frightening," they said.

Hemalatha went on to say that the family was informed about Rao's hallucinations. in Navi Mumbai Taloja Jail. "But the latest call, on July 11 is much more worrisome as he did not answer straight questions on his health and went into a kind of delirious and hallucinated talk about the funeral of his father and mother, the events that happened seven decades and four decades ago respectively. Then his co-accused companion took the phone from him and informed us that he is not able to walk, go to toilet and brush his teeth on his own. We were also told that he is always hallucinating that we, family members, were waiting at the jail gate to receive him as he was getting released," she said.

Officials forcing us to relocate to Koheda market, allege farmers

PNS WARANGAL

The marketing officials shifted the Kothapet fruit market to Koheda and advised the farmers to bring fruits to Koheda market. But the farmers and commission agents say that it would amount to contempt of court and questioned the authorities the rationale behind shifting the market to Koheda without fully developing amenities there.

It may be recalled that the tin roofs of temporary sheds set up in the Koheda fruit market were blown away sometime back as rain accompanied by gales lashed the city. Several have been injured in the incident too.

The farmers argue that the officials are advising them to sell their fruits in Koheda market in spite of the fact that there are arrangements made at the market. There are no platforms built there. During the current monsoon season the fruits would get damaged, the farmers lamented.

Earlier, some farmers and traders, who conducted operations there sustained injuries as the roof of the temporary sheds got blown away. Since there are no arrangements for farmers and traders at Koheda market, the commission agents moved the State High Court against the government's decision to shift the market to Koheda.

The court ruled that the government should relocate the market to Koheda only after proving all amenities to farmers and traders. Throwing the court orders to winds, the Marketing Department directed the farmers and traders to move to Koheda market. The commission agents said that they would move the contempt of court petition in the High Court. Traders and farmers questioned the government whether the Coronavirus would subside if the market is relocated to BJP president J P Nadda on Sunday took aim at Kerala Chief Minister Pinarayi Vijayan over the gold smug-gling case detected at the Thiruvananthapuram airport, and also accused him of "messing up" the COVID-19 situation in the state by "suppressing" figures. Nadda alleged that the Left government in the state was inefficient, corrupt and believed" in violence.

Speaking from the national capital at the inauguration of a party office in Kerala's Kasaragod district, Nadda said the CPI(M)-led LDF and the Congress-led UDF were two sides of the same coin and sought people's support to his party. With the BJP having been unable to make a serious political impact in the southern state despite its increased vote share in recent polls, Nadda accused the LDF and the UDF of joining hands to keep his party at bay, and asserted that the saffron organisation was determined to emerge victorious there.

Nadda attacked Congress leader Rahul Gandhi, who is a Lok Sabha MP from the state, as well for his criticism of the Modi government on the border standoff with China. Gandhi skipped 11 meetings of the Parliament's committee on defence, and this shows his dedication to the issue, Nadda said, and accused him of "demoralising" the defence forces.

"Worried for our party," the former Union minister said. Congress Rajya Sabha MP Vivek Tankha said his worry is every party member's concern.

"Kapil ji your worry is every party member's concern. It's time to strengthen the party to fight forces who have only 1 agenda :: weaken congress and our democratic values and institutions," he tweeted.

A power struggle between Gehlot and his deputy Sachin Pilot, which has been on since the Congress' central leader-

The latest flashpoint between the two is a notice issued to Pilot by the Rajasthan police's Special Operation Group in a case related to alleged attempts to bribe Congress MLAs to switch sides in the Rajya Sabha polls. Gehlot, however, has repeat-

People testing negative but showing symptoms should be treated: Experts

PNS NEW DELHI

Test results may come out negative even if one has contracted COVID-19, experts have warned, advising that those showing symptoms of the disease must be treated without waiting for a confirmatory test to prevent aggravation of the infection.

There have been several cases where patients showing clinical symptoms of COVID-19 have tested negative for the virus multiple times. They were confirmed positive after repeated tests, doctors said.

The general perception of the experts now is that a high degree of suspicion arising out of the clinical symptomatology and the CT scan reports should be the guiding factor for treatment rather than rely-ing only on the RT-PCR test which has a sensitivity of only

New US visa rules: Indian students on the edge

PNS NEW DELHI

Fear of deportation in the middle of a global crisis, unpaid loans, rising risk of COVID-19 infection, dropping out a semester and the possibility of never being able to return to campus are among the concerns of Indian students in the US after announcement of the new visa regulations.

In a move that is expected to adversely impact thousands of Indian students, the US immigration authority has announced that foreign students will have to leave the country or risk deportation if their universities switch to online-only classes in this fall semester due to the coronavirus pandemic.

While Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) and Johns

Hopkins University have filed a lawsuit seeking to revoke the order, some universities, including Princeton University, Stanford University, California Institute of Technology (Caltech), and Cornell University have announced their support for the lawsuit. India's Foreign Secretary Harsh Vardhan Shringla also raised the issue with US Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs David Hale during an online meeting earlier this week stating there is a need to keep in mind the role of educational exchanges and peopleto-people relations between the two countries as they played a key role in development of the overall ties

However, the students continue to be gripped with anxiety waiting for further updates.

This will be a big blow to students who came to the US with long term plans. I stayed back in the country when the campuses shut in view of the COVID-19 pandemic. I did not want to travel as well as different time zones would have made it miserable to attend online classes. But suddenly my stay here is now legally invalid, Shobhna Mukherjee, a student at Duke University said.

"What happens to the semester, what happens to the education loan, what happens to the work I was doing here at the university to aid my tuition fore? And most importantly if fees? And most importantly if I am deported, will I ever be able to get back? There are no answers to these questions," she added.

The Dharavi project

WHO has praised Asia's biggest slum for containing COVID-19 through community engagement and fast protocols

From being a major cause for concern to being praised by the World Health Organisation (WHO) for successfully containing the community spread of the Coronavirus, Asia's largest slum Dharavi, with a population density of 2.27 lakh per sg km, has come a long way. Along with Italy, Spain and South Korea, Mumbai's slum cluster has shown that even if the outbreak is very intense and happens in an under-serviced and infrastructure-scarce settlement, it can still be brought back under control. All it needs is a synchronised human drill. Dharavi is indeed a test case of how resource-deprived zones can fight the virus, too. Its 6.5 lakh residents live in an area of just 2.5 km, which challenges the golden mantras for fighting the pandemic, namely social distancing, frequent hand-washing and living in well-ventilated spaces. A minimum of seven to eight people live together in small, 100 square feet dwellings and queue up for water each day as piped water at home is a luxury they can only dream of. A whopping 80 per cent of the slum-dwellers are forced to use community toilets and fresh air and good ventilation is a rarity as homes and factories co-exist in single buildings lining the slum's narrow lanes. Yet, on July 7, the slum reported only one Coronavirus case and till July 10, the number of cases was just 2,359, a far cry from what was expected when the first case was discovered in Dharavi on April 1. In fact, Western Press editorials had written off Dharavi as a time bomb waiting to explode.

So what was it that the Brihanmumbai Municipal Corporation (BMC) did to turn the tide of the pandemic? Because even as the rest of Mumbai suffered and became a hotspot, Dharavi defied all logic and did not turn into a Corona cesspool. The BMC decided to take the problem by its horns and involved the community in its chase of the virus. It set up teams to reach out to families and they reached out to almost seven lakh people in Dharavi, tracking signs and symptoms and tracing contacts of the infected. Between April 1 and July 10, a whopping 47,500 households were scanned by doctors and private clinics. More than 3.6 lakh people were screened, out of which 14,970 people were screened in mobile vans, thus supplementing the work of overworked health centres. As many as 8,246 senior citizens were surveyed and as the key to containing any pandemic is rigorous testing, the BMC also ran fever clinics to let people get themselves checked without fear. Its teams also checked people's oxygen saturation levels and if they were below 95 per cent, they were taken to quarantine centres. The logic was that this was faster than testing and in any case it was not possible to test everyone. As it is, they were only able to test 13,500 people. The BMC also employed 350 local private practitioners and if someone was found to have symptoms, they could volunteer to be quarantined even without getting tested. Since home quarantine was never an option in Dharavi, local clubs and schools were converted into quarantine facilities where free food and health check-ups were provided. As many as 2,000 elderly were taken to protective guarantine and only critically-ill patients were admitted to hospitals while 90 per cent patients were treated inside the slum. All private hospitals were taken onboard and acquired for treatment, including Sai Hospital, Prabhat Nursing Home and Family Care. A 200-bed hospital was also set up in a record 14 days. What Dharavi did was that it focussed on community engagement. Politicians and NGOs provided thousands of free meals and rations while Bollywood actors and businessmen donated gear, oxygen cylinders, gloves, masks, medicines and ventilators. Dharavi also followed the basic rules of testing, tracing, isolating and treating all those who were sick and hence, broke the chain of transmission and suppressed the virus. And to make sure that the lockdown worked, free meals and rations were provided to residents trapped at home without work and a source of income. It's not surprising then that Dharavi has turned out to be a beacon of hope for densely populated cities in poor nations and Delhi and other cities struggling with the pandemic could well learn a lesson or two from it. Human endeavour is the biggest cure.

Erdogan's revisionism # opinion 06 End this patronage

The so-called steel frame of bureaucracy has developed jelly in its spine, which is out to please our political masters. A systematic overhaul is needed to avoid Dubey-like encounters ndia's most wanted gangster Vikas Dubey is dead. The police encounter may have raised several questions even as politicians, civil rights activists and human rights workers have called it a "cold blooded" murder. But the fact remains that over 100 families rejoiced as the news about Dubey's encounter reached Bekaru - the non-descript village in Kanpur — where his fiefdom ran large. Sweets were distributed and the family of the eight policemen, who were martyred on July 3 in an ambush, expressed satisfaction, saying justice was finally done. Even Dubey's parents disowned him and said he deserved what he got.

The saga that started on the night of July 3 ended on the morning of July 11 but the episode has many twists and turns. Many high-profile actors — who puppeteered Dubey behind the may have heaved a sigh of scene relief following his killing. They continue to be safe and unseen. This is why this encounter will not bring an end to the criminal-political nexus, which thrives in every gram panchayat of Uttar Pradesh and which, according to lawmakers, is an elixir of Indian politics, one that has kept the political system going.

The story of a young man, having political ambition, entering the blind alley of crime to follow the orders of his political masters is not new in Uttar Pradesh. "Yeh gaon gaon ki kahani hai (this is the story of every village)," said a lawmaker with a wry smile. A few hundred rupees in one's pocket, a motorcycle and caste backing are enough to turn any youth, jobless and restless, into a short-time criminal. In a matter of years, he would qualify to become a full-time criminal. Sometime later, he could start contesting the elections and even win the Assembly or the Lok Sabha polls. Sometimes, even from jail.

Dubey's story is no different. He and Lallan Bajpai, who was the head of the Shivli nagar panchayat, were friends but in 1996, differences cropped up between the two. During the Assembly election, Bajpai supported Santosh Shukla of the BJP while supported Sama Party (BSP) candidate Hari Kishan Srivastava. Shukla lost that election. This widened the gap further. In 2001, Dubey tried to acquire land near the Shivli Inter College where he wanted to develop a market. When the manager (Sidĥeshwar Pandey) opposed, Dubey killed him. Then Dubey attacked Bajpai, killing three of his men, though the latter survived.

Dubey killed Saroj Shukla inside a police station where the latter took shelter following a brawl. In reality Dubey had stage-managed this episode with his contacts in the forces to corner and eliminate him. Despite the grisly crime being committed in the afternoon and that, too, in the presence several cops, Dubey's terror was such that the police witnesses turned hostile during the trial. The irony was that even the investigating officer turned hostile — this has probably never happened in the annals of any criminal investigation.

Little wonder then that the strongman's criminal prowess soon attracted political attention. Dubey was happy to oblige and dabbled in village and panchayat-level politics. He was first elected as the pradhan of a village and later became the member of district panchayat with the backing of two regional parties. After he decided to distance himself from politics, his wife took over the mantle and was elected as the district panchayat member. She, too, was elected with support from a regional political party. Gradually, Dubev ensured that his relatives got elected in local-level elections. ypur in Kanpur cit

(SP) and then to the BJP. At one time, Dubey even claimed that Behenii (as Mavawati is known among her supporters) had called him by his first name in a crowd of 500 people. His influence was so entrenched in the region that he would hold kangaroo courts where his word would be the only law. Those who did not abide by what he said were beaten up by his cohorts. Even when the police demolished his mansion and started an investigation against him with vigour, people of almost eight villages were afraid to talk to the police. The police officials are quite candid to admit that had Dubey not been eliminated, he would have become a lawmaker — may be in 2022 (Assembly election) or 2024 (Lok Sabha). His political clout would have gone up. He would have engaged the sharpest of legal brains in India and would have proved in the court that he was not present in Bikaru village on July 3. Dubey would have also got a reprieve like he got in the 2001 murder case. In 2003, the then Mulayam Singh Government did not even challenge the lower court's order in the High Court.

All of this is not a new story Ittar Pradesh D brought a new dimension to the political-crime nexus where short-term criminals, who hold sway in 10-12 villages and can influence a few thousand votes, hold the key to any election.

Earlier, criminals preferred to stick to one party. But Dubey was different. Instead of clinging to one party, he preferred to change the party flag on his car mast as

its report, the Association of Democratic Reforms (ADR) had said that 143 legislators -36 per cent of the total strength of 402 — have criminal records against them. Of this, 107 - 26per cent of the total strength are facing murder charges. Who gave these criminals political patronage? Why do voters elect these tainted leaders despite the ADR educating them about such criminals?

The time has come for some serious introspection. Is it only the political system that's responsible for this rot? If the nexus between the criminals and politicians is deepening, this is the time for the judiciary to stand up and deliver. Government records suggest that till 2018, 10.27 lakh cases were pending in various lower courts in Uttar Pradesh alone. Delayed justice means the criminals can walk away. This was very much evident in the case of Dubey, who, despite facing 60 criminal charges, including that of the murder of a Minister-rank leader, was roaming free, build-

The world-famous Hagia Sophia museum in Istanbul, originally a cathedral, has been re-converted into a mosque

he Blue Mosque undoubtedly has its place in Istanbul but it is the Hagia Sophia which has the heart of every visitor. For rarely does one find such a secular icon in any world culture. Built as a cathedral, it has lasted since the 6th century through waves of conquests in Turkey, each era adding a layer of syncretism and a defining mark but never swamping its preceding legacy. So even though it was converted into a mosque after the Ottoman conquest in 1453, with domes on the outside, its insides were not defaced but just covered with lime wash and concealed. Just the practice of faith and its prayers changed. So Christian emblems, including the famous mosaic of the Virgin Mary on its central dome, were preserved through hundreds of years. And citizens internalised this co-existence as part of their DNA, one that Kemal Ataturk, the founder of modern Turkey, envisioned as being the progressive face of an Islamist republic, one which would endure in the contemporary world. So he decreed that it should be a museum, where every faith symbol would be respected and kept the way it was, and welcome believers from everywhere. But according to a new decree by Turkish President Recep Erdogan, this all-faith shrine will revert to being a mosque as the courts annulled its museum status following petitions by staunch Islamists.

By changing the status of Hagia Sophia, Erdogan is symbolically taking down Ataturk's inclusive and secular vision that had endeared Turkey to the world. To him, that amounts to pandering to the West. Yet that would have been the only antidote to the growing Islamophobia around the world. Powered by new-fangled radicalism, hyper-nationalism, immense nativism and a maximalist desire to lead a post-modern Islamic world, the Turkish leader has made Hagia Sophia's status a matter of Turkey's sovereignty. And a message for his core Islamist constituency that his leadership is worth its support. So though the move invited criticism from around the world, particularly the UNESCO, which said that the shrine was a part of shared world heritage and should not be appropriated by religiosity, Erdogan ordered the first prayers there and took down the site's social media handles. Of course, non-Muslim visitors would continue to be allowed in. Islamists have been campaigning for the reconversion of Hagia Sophia for long but a secular Opposition had been able to hold them off. But in a post-pandemic world, where Governments are justifying power grabs by all means, Erdogan has used this sensitive religious matter to justify his leadership, which is increasingly coming under criticism for mishandling the post-COVID economy and rising unemployment. And since Hagia Sophia was an Orthodox shrine once, his unilateral move has upset both Greece and Russia, both of which have sizeable Orthodox church followers. At a time when inter-faith dialogues have been replaced by collisions, Hagia Sophia has been a bridge in a deeply divided world. To challenge its status is to challenge civilisation itself. To define its identity sits at odds with a city that has bridged Europe with Asia. With this move, Erdogan has only stereotyped Islam further as revisionist and archaic. Hagia Sophia represented the dynamism he could have used to change the discourse and debunk myths. Perhaps even reclaim his ambition to craft a neo-Islamic world. A secular icon strengthens faith, does not erode it.

The same year, on October 12, being a Brahmin-dominated area, Dubey's caste added more strength to his muscle power. He preferred being called panditji as Brahmins are addressed in rural Uttar Pradesh. He was a big catalytic factor in Mayawati's famous Dalit-Brahmin social experiment. With a change of Government, Dubey switched loyalty to the Samajwadi Party

Sir — In these troubling times, we need a laugh and Noah Lyles, a fast runner but not as fast as initially thought, provided it. Because of COVID restrictions, a number of sporting events have been postponed or cancelled, including the Olympics. The spirit of this sporting event is to inspire us to be the best we can, faster, higher and stronger. It does truly inspire us although not this year. An alternative was found with the athletes competing in a ZOOM-like approach at different locations around the world.

Lyles competed in the 200m in an apparent time of 18.90 seconds, a new world record that even he could not believe and he was right. As it turned out, he had mistakenly started in the wrong lane and, thus, ran 15 m less than others. He would have known that something was wrong as athletes at this level know what they are doing every second of the race. Obviously, this was his worst best day.

We need to enjoy these occasional, small, 15 m errors as everything is too serious at the moment. If we need further

Make India's defence sector self-reliant

n the aftermath of the Chinese Army build-up in the Galwan Valley, the Government has rushed to make capital acquisitions for IAF. The Defence Ministry has cleared the proposal for the purchase of 21 MiG-29 and 12 Sukhoi-30 MKI fighter planes. The Air Chief Marshal said that an order for another 83 Light Combat Aircraft (LCA) Teias MK IA is likely to be placed with HAL soon. He added that there was a higher likelihood of the Central Public Sector Undertaking (CPSU) finishing the full development of the Light Utility Helicopter this year.

Not long ago, the ruling Government had ejected the CPSU and HAL out of the deal for the acquisition of 36 Rafale fighter jets from Dassault Aviation. According to it, the CPSU was dropped for various inefficiencies and high costs associated with co-production. Ironically, the substitute for HAL as the offset partner in the contract was Reliance Aerostructure Limited. In those days, the Comptroller and Auditor General of India (CAG) was conducting a performance audit on the "Capital Acquisition in IAF." It was expected that the audit would bring clarity to the unexplained terms in the Rafale aircraft supply contract. But the national auditor churned out an innocuous report which was devoid of any independent analysis on the important aspects in the deal

Strange as it may sound, the Constitutional institutions have been stingy in acknowledging the fact that India's biggest builder of warplanes, HAL, is the powerhouse in the IAF. This is not to say that the aircraft builder has always acquitted itself as an epitome of efficiency and economy. In various reports, the CAG has castigated the CPSU for inefficiency, delays and cost overruns. Nonetheless, the country needs this strategic defence manufacturer now more than ever

Sir — This refers to the editorial, "Encounter the truth" (July 11). The killing of Vikas Dubey has once again raised several questions about "encounters" being used as a tool by the police to deliver "justice." Ideally, Dubey should have been brought to the court for his alleged crimes. Being a citizen of the country, he had the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty. But looks like the police has little time for the due process of law. he rising prices of food items are adding to the woes of the people even as they struggle to come out of the economic impact the Coronavirus-necessitated lockdown has had on their lives and livelihoods. Now that India has moved into a phased "unlocking" stage, States like West Bengal, Assam and Uttar Pradesh are in a quandary whether to allow full opening of their economies or continue as before with select sectors being allowed to open up. This uncertainty is disrupting supply chains and creating artificial shortages in most parts of the country.

It is a double whammy. Recession has hit not only India but the entire globe. Job losses, reduction in income and fall in production are common. But in countries like India, the rising cost of transportation due to the unprecedented hike in administered petroleum/diesel prices, is telling on the people. Given the reduced purchasing power, inflation has added to the woes of consumers and farmers alike. Despite higher minimum support prices, farmers have not been able to get even the minimum cost for their produce and have been forced to sell at rock-bottom prices.

Since most restaurants, hotels and processing plants remain under lockdown, the demand for vegetables and foodgrains is low. This has a direct bearing on most farm produces. Corn for example fetched ₹2,200 per quintal in 2019 but this year it is difficult to get even onefourth of that price. So a farmer who earned ₹20 plus lakh last year, despite better production, is content with ₹5 lakh this year. Plus, the farm sector is in trouble as input costs have increased manifold during the last few months. Even irrigating the fields costs more than double now, as the administered price of diesel has set new records. The people are certainly not beneficiaries of the crash in crude prices to around $40 a barrel as the taxes have remained high. Any society that pays high fuel costs suffers in more than one way. It erodes incomes, reduces purchasing capacity and causes overall slowdown at a time when pace in production is a must.

However, the rising food prices are in reality a pre-Corona phenomenon. Even in December 2019, prices were rising. The Consumer Price Index (CPI) rose 14.2 per cent on an annual basis. This was the highest increase since December 2013. The latest 20 to 40 per cent rise in prices of vegetables is attributed to higher labour costs and 15 to 20 per cent higher transportation costs. Supplies, too, have reduced by about 15 per cent due to summer rains damaging vegetable crops. The shortage of labour following the reverse migration has increased wages of farm labourers.

These all reflect in the spiralling vegetable and food grain prices. Even prices of rice and wheat have increased in the market despite a massive dole being given to the poor by the Government. It is said that in about 11 States, the free distribution of foodgrains has not happened as planned. According to the Ministry of Consumer Affairs data. 36 States and Union Territories procured 6.38 lakh metric tonnes (MT) of eight lakh MT allocated for migrant workers by the Centre for the months of May and June. However, till June 30, just 1.07 lakh MT, about 13 per cent of the foodgrains was distributed. Andhra Pradesh, Goa, Gujarat, Jharkhand, Ladakh, Maharashtra, Meghalaya, Odisha, Sikkim, Tamil Nadu, Telangana and Tripura had distributed not more than one per cent of the supplies got by them.

The crisis has been building up on the price front since the 2019 general elections. The Food Corporation of India (FCI) procured 36 million tonnes prior to that in 2018, the highest since 2012-13. It swelled the FCI's stocks to 75 million tonnes — 33 million tonnes of wheat and 42 million tonnes of rice. It is estimated to be about one-third of the total production. It has been utilised well for distribution till coming November at a cost of ₹1.5 lakh crore. But the mismatch in distribution, the market supplies and other factors have continued to add to the prices. Interestingly enough, despite free supplies, the prices have not come down in rural markets either. This is intriguing. It is attributed to reverse migration causing a large influx in rural areas. The prices of edible oils have also noticed significant spikes. The village markets have seen a spiral in locally-produced oils. This has happened due to the rise in mustard and other oilseeds prices. labour costs. electricity and diesel prices. Overall, expelling and freight costs have increased. The Reserve Bank of India (RBI) in June noticed the inflationary situation. Its Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) says, "The macroeconomic impact of the pandemic is turning out to be more severe than initially anticipated because of supply disruptions and demand compression. Beyond the destruction of economic and financial activity, livelihood and health are severely affected." The MPC says it is necessary to ease financial conditions further. It reduced interest rates which caused hardships and further reduced purchasing power of the most vulnerable classes. There may not be any magic wand but a soft policy approach and reduction in Income-Tax rates for now would help the common man. With a benevolent tax regime, prices too can mellow. It would reduce governance costs and add to the well-being of the country.

n the badlands of Uttar Pradesh (UP), things only change to remain the same. In that iconic film, Omkara, made by Vishal Bhardwaj and located in the diabolical landscape of western UP where bahubalis (strongmen) call the shots, every character, with the caste prefix attached most often with their surnames and on their foreheads, fits into this eternally-predictable jigsaw puzzle. There is a revealing scene in this incredible gangster film of bitter realism. Langra incredible gangster film of bitter realism. Langra Tyagi, obviously a Brahmin, played superbly by Saif Ali Khan with a pronounced limp, goes to a jail as a "visitor" to meet a buddy. The police-man at the "reception" is making a loud announcement. Among other instructions he is clearly stating that no arms, ammunition and so on will be allowed to be taken inside the prison. So Langra Tyagi walks up to him nonchalantly and declares for all to hear that he has arms and ammunition. The policeman looks up and jokammunition. The policeman looks up and jok-ingly dismisses him, saying: "Chal jhutte (Oh come on, you are a liar)." In recent weeks, indeed quite apparently since July 3 this year, almost a similar script played out for the world to see. And it was more platile than the pandemic, the lockdown, the quarantine, mass migration of workers especially in UP and Bihar, joblessness and the economy that's awaiting some sort of resurrection. It had such a typically inevitable ending that even a C-Grade Bollywood script writer would blush in astonishment and embarrassment.

By now, the macabre story of the murder of eight policemen, including a Deputy Superintendent of Police, in UP and the 'encounter" of the man who led the attacks on "encounter" of the man who led the attacks on the cops has unfolded, with all its gory details in the media and social platforms. More than the detailing, which is unfolding and which is still wrapped in many hidden sleaze tales of the underground and the overground, mixing in a sinister synthesis with such lucidity, there are too many questions. All of these surround the bithmany questions. All of these surround the hitherto not so popular figure of the protagonist: Vikas Dubey of village Bikaru in Kanpur Dehat, Chaubepur block.

unique selling points. Not really a Robin Hood, or a do-gooder bandit, he was soon branded as one of the most wanted criminals in the countryside.

He liked to be called "Pandit", proudly flaunting his Brahmin legacy. The first murder case apparently happened in 1990. Nothing happened to him in terms of the justice system as is the undeclared norm in UP in many cases. He thereby chose to become a lackey of a politician who shifted from the BJP to the Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP). Dubey, too, joined the BSP in 1995-96. Both he and his wife won local elections by hook or by crook. Significantly, he was the main accused in the murder of BJP leader Santosh Shukla, who was then a ENOUGH POLITICAL Santosii Shukia, who Minister of State, no less, at the Shivli police station, again in Kanpur Dehat THINGS COOLED in 2001. Predictably, again, he was acquitted. Dubey was finally arrested in 2017, booked under the Gangsters Act and Anti-Social Activities (Prevention) Act. Two years later he was chargesheeted. However, his activities continued unabated. As is well-known, for reasons best known to him, Dubey's gang ambushed a police party looking for him on the night of July 3 in his village and killed them in cold blood. Eight cops were killed and several injured. Dubey was reportedly tipped off by his contacts in the police force that a raid was about to be conducted on him. The gangster and his men not only took the guns of the policemen but also reportedly inflicted severe wounds with an axe on their bodies. Why he participated in this elaborate bloodbath, only he knew; something, perhaps, the nation will never come to know now.

Since then, he was known to have travelled across four State borders, undetected, and ended up, as if going for a morning walk, at the Mahakaleshwar Jyotirlinga temple in Ujjain in Madhya Pradesh (MP), on July 9. Unarmed, he surrendered, without an inch of anxiety written on his face, to the unarmed and untrained guards at the temple. He was reported-ly identified when he repeatedly shout-that it was not the same one which was carrying him initially. Reportedly, the vehicle which overturned was a Mahindra SUV while he had been travelling in a Tata Safari earlier.

Thereafter, the cops came out with a predictable version: The SUV overturned, Dubey tried to snatch a gun from a policeman and run. Like Langra Tyagi, Dubey walked with a limp; he simply could not run. Even then, the UP Police was forced to shoot him dead. One wonders why? Was he shot in the chest? If he was running, with a limp, how come he was not shot in the back? Why did he surrender in the first place if he really wanted to run? Why did he not hide and get holed up, with enough political patronage, till things cooled down? Why did he not surren-der in a court with lawyers, in full public view, and instead chose to send a symbolic message by surrendering in a Hindu temple? What were the sleazy, sinister and shady secrets Dubey was hiding in his several decades of criminal life, so lucidly tangled within the web of UP politics?

with over 60 cases against him, including multiple cases of land-grabbing and murders, Dubey was known to be a typical bahubali. Pandering to the upper caste politicians at the local level with big ambitions, he not only wielded the gun as an insignia of his prowess but also convinced them about his invincibility in their grand design. It is slowly emerging that he had been used by politicians across the spectrum. It is also being openly said that he was bumped off brazenly and with a total lack of finesse in the darkness of the night so that he would not reveal all the shady stories of politicians and policemen up his sleeve.

However, uncanny questions remain, about his life and especially the manner in which he died. It is common knowledge that officers of the UP Police have a reasonably murky record in terms of the numerous "encounters" under the current Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) regime, despite observations against the same by the highest court in the land. Vikas Dubey, shot dead at the age of 43 in a striped white T-shirt with a pronounced and happy potbelly, started his criminal life when he was young. His early gang was conceived in his youth, with muscle-flexing, land-grabbing, extortion and murder as his ed his name for all to hear, and his identity was established through the use of the Truecaller app on the phone.

The MP Police handed him over to the UP Police, which then took him in a convoy to some unknown destination, probably Kanpur, followed by intrepid reporters in their vehicles. He was apparently made to sit with policemen, unarmed obviously, and handcuffed, in a Tata Safari. He showed no desire to escape and had willfully surrendered, obviously working on a bigger plot. There were speculations in the media and amid UP-watchers that he would be bumped off just like the rest of his close aides had been.

On July 10, as the night unfolded into another macabre drama, the SUV with Dubey inside, surrounded by policemen, allegedly turned turtle, on a road which did not seem to have any bumps or potholes. According to reports, the SUV, which had skid on a smooth tarmac, did not leave any tyre marks or wasn't damaged. Besides, its doors were jammed. There are reports

Indeed, if Dubey was bumped off, which seems to be so at this moment, what was the hurry to enact this public spectacle so soon after his arrest and so shoddily at that? And why were the reporters following the convoy stopped again and again, and then finally barricaded?

In the badlands of UP, these questions make little sense. Indeed, those reporters who would be brave enough to ask these questions are clearly not following their beats. Law keepers have always been walking a tightrope in this part of the Hindi heartland. With the killing of gangster Vikas Dubey, the criminalisation of politics has again come a full circle. Or, should we say, that it has turned turtle?

The rise and rise of secular sectarianism

With intensifying economic, political tensions and polarisation, the nature of internal conflicts within societies is evolving

NADEEM PARACHA

■ he concept of sectarianism is largely associated with factions and divisions within a religion. However, there is also now an increasingly used expression called "secular sectarianism." This is about factionalism within a secular ideology, especially one which directly or indirectly sees itself as being as grand an idea as the idea of faith. In fact, in some cases, it wants to actually replace it as a new kind of faith. Most secular ideas, however, retain a democratic respect for religion, as long as it remains relegated to dealing with the people's personal spir-in the worldly workings of the Government. But there have been episodes where some followers of a secular ideology broke away to remould this ideology into a new faith that was to replace the old religions. In the late 18th century, when a violent revolution in France overthrew the French monarchy and Catholic clergy, the intellectual leadership of the revolution looked to create a secular democratic republic. However, within this group were also those who believed that the revolution had only been able to weaken the political role of Catholicism and that a new religion was needed to completely expunge it from French society. US academic Keith

Baker writes that a faith called "Cult of Reason" was founded complete with temples of reason. This did not go down very well by most of their compatriots who saw it as a contradictory act. How could secularism, which insists on separating Church new State religion? Second, the detractors also pointed out that the idea of reason, in the political context at least, rationalised this separation instead of becoming a theological doctrine itself.

The "Cult of Reason" was, therefore, a short-lived idea and sidelined. However, soon it was replaced by the "Cult of the Supreme Being." This was mainly conceived by the radical French republican, Maximilien Robespierre.

When his faction of French revolutionaries overwhelmed the "moderates", Robespierre declared the new faith as the State religion. Historian Emmet Kennedy writes that Robespierre insisted that a belief in a godhead was important for social order but it needed to be done through reason. This, however, did not stop him from organising festivals to honour the "god of reason." This again was problematic.

The "moderates" in the French after the revolution, had agreed with the revolution's pursuit of completely abolishing the monarchy and neutralising the political power that the clergy and the Church once exercised. However, many of them were also of the view that religion's social utility need not be attacked. Ironically, Robespierre, who detested his moderate colleagues, agreed. But he suspected that remnants of the Church might be used to usurp his faction's power in the assembly. So, he decided to create a whole new faith to fill the void left behind the receding avenues of Catholicism.

The contemporary Slovenian philosopher, Slavoj i ek, explains Robespierre as a highly contradictory character who placed the "necessity" of violence and terror in the context of ideas that were actually opposed to those that he was propagating. In fact, in an early exhibition of secular sectarianism, he opposed the idea of separating faith itual matters and does not interfere and State, become the source of a assembly, that had come into being from politics, by quoting the 18th unacceptable to reject the new faith.

century French philosopher Voltaire as follows: "If God did not exist, it would be necessary to invent him."

Secondly, Robespierre fully understood how, for centuries, the Catholic Church in Europe had managed to gather tremendous degrees of political and economic power. But since the French revolution was directly aimed at abolishing this power along with the monarchy, Robespierre decided to replace Catholicism with an alternative faith.

To Robespierre, the "Supreme Being" was a deity called Liberty. This, to him, was a "living deity" which was to be worshipped through democracy and reason. This then would lead to a life of virtue and the immortality of the human soul. The moderates were left horrified when Robespierre started to hold festivals which looked quite like the ones held by the fallen clergy of yore. Even though he was already ordering the beheading of critics, he also made it

When his faction's acts became too radical, the moderates managed to remove him through an internal coup. His faith, too, was abolished. Robespierre's faction, believing itself to be purer republicans and revolutionaries (compared to the moderates), could not help but fall into a "god complex," with the right to judge what was politically correct and what wasn't.

In the 1960s, the Red Book that carried quotes of the founder of communist China, Mao Tse Tung, became a sacred tome in China and Mao became a living deity of sorts. Of course, in theory, communism is atheistic, but when Mao whipped up "Cultural Revolution" in 1966, "Maoism" almost became a religion. Those in the Chinese Communist Party, who exhibited distaste or concern towards what Mao had triggered, were cut down by fanatical mobs, waving the Red Book and claiming to be on the right side of the revolution. International communism split into various factions

JNU professor Ajay Gudavarthy writes that, over the years, because of intensifying economic and political tensions and polarisation, the nature of internal conflicts in societies is changing. According to him, old class and ethnic conflicts remain but they are being increasingly added to by conflicts within marginalised groups who were once most likely to remain united. He gave the examples of racial equality and women's rights groups who, after finding the need to expand their identities beyond the usual "binary" ways that race and gender are perceived and debated, have ended up spending more effort battling other such groups who may think otherwise. It's like standing in front of a mirror and shouting at your own reflection, believing the reflection to be the enemy. In a way then, sectarianism is not unique to religions alone.

WRITINGS AND THE THEMES...

I started writing during my mature years. My first poem was when I was 16 years old, but it did not get published until I was 23. By 25, I started graying and my hair was white. My poetry was my way of coming out as gay to the world. I had to hide it as I couldn't openly say that I was gay. My poetry is my means of conveying things to the outside world. I don't torture my readers, I write for boys who are coming out and there are four-five words that I use time and again. Unlike the Americans, I never used big words and jargon. I waited and made a proper theme vocabulary and style for myself. My second poem was published when I was 40.

A poet, critic, activist, and academician, he may be popularly referred to as the first openly queer poet. Hoshang Dinshaw Merchant, a retired Professor, who has written several critically acclaimed books of poetry and critical writing, describes himself as a male homosexual Parsi by religion, Christian by education, Hindu by culture and Sufi by persuasion. Penning over 13 books of poetry and critical studies, Merchant is also known for Yaraana — Gay Writing — from South Asia, which grew to become a seminal anthology of queer literature. Hoshang who made Hyderabad his home since the mid-80s speaks to NAVEEN KUMAR about his journey as a writer, early years, and more...

He has a Masters from Occidental College, Los Angeles and for his Ph.D. in 1981, he wrote a dissertation on Anaïs Nin. He has lived and taught in Heidelberg, Jerusalem, and Iran where he was exposed to various radical movements of the Left. "I was a very good student, also a loner growing up who never played a game in my life. But I was good at art, painting and essay writing and always stood first in English. However, I was not someone who you would call an overall topper," he says.

SETTLING DOWN IN HYDERABAD...

My family was the fourth generation in Bombay back then. My childhood was very that of a wealthy and pampered kid. We were those kids who had a car to pick and drop us back from school. My parents got divorced when I was very young and that was very traumatic. We were told that those who go with my father would get all the family money and those who go with mother, won't. I have three sisters and they went with my father. I was sent for higher studies to the States with a meager allowance. Though I was very poor, I was rich in my experiences through my travels. In 1984, I came back to Bombay but could not find a job. After two years of unemployment, I joined Hyderabad Central University in 1986 after I noticed an advertisement in the newspaper. I was kicked out of 13 jobs in 10 years and have travelled all over the world before settling down in Hyderabad. Even here, I could not rent a room and moved places 17 times in 12 months because of my sexual orientation. Thankfully nobody touched me or beat me up.

GAY MARRIAGE...

Marriages are about property. Any marriage. Say somebody has served somebody for 25 years, and then he dies. So the other one inherits his property. But what about people who don't have property? Or what about the kind of relationships that don't last that long? The kind of relationships I've had — two months, three months, a few days. What does marriage mean to people like us? But I can understand that people have grown up in a heterosexual society and want to think, "Oh, I want to live with this person forever". I did too. I knew no better. I'd also grown up seeing my father and mother. As human beings, we live in our heads, we don't live in society.

Cleaning your house? Go eco-friendly with DIY bio-enzymes

he lockdown sure got a lot of us to try various things at home. While some realised we could cook dishes like Haleem too in our own homes, some others realised they could grow vegetables in a garden in their own backyard. The newest trend to be catching on has to be making our own 'Bio-enzymes' at home to keep chemicals at bay.

What are Bio-enzymes, you ask? Bio-enzyme cleaners are organic solutions produced by fermentation of fruits, vegetables, sugar, and water. In simpler terms, Bio-enzymes are a natural way to manage your home cleaning need, by doing yourself and the environment a favour, for almost no cost. Several people have been taking interest in this, including actress Samantha Akkineni, who can't stop promoting this simple yet effective discovery she made recently! So how do they work? These cleaners use good bacteria to digest wastes, soils, stains, and bad odours. This is possible by the bacteria that produce enzymes specifically designed to break down certain molecules into smaller pieces. How to make your own Bio-

HOME-MADE BIO-ENZYME CLEANERS ARE ORGANIC SOLUTIONS PRODUCED BY FERMENTATION OF FRUITS, VEGETABLES, SUGAR, AND WATER

How to make your own Bioenzyme at home? All you need are over 3 kilograms of citrus peels (of oranges, lemons, pineapple, and sweet lime, etc.), 10 litres of water, 1 kilogram of jaggery/brown sugar, a teaspoon of yeast. (The yeast here can be the remaining of your previous batch of bio enzyme, or if this is the first time you're making one, instead of a month with yeast, it'll take you three months without.)

Now mix all these ingredients in a plastic container that has screw bottle caps. Now leave this for a month (3 months without yeast). Release excess gases by opening the bottle cap once in two days but ensure it is covered always. Once it's ready, drain the liquid and store it in plastic bottles. The bio-enzyme is ready to be used for multiple cleaning purposes. What to keep in mind while

What to keep in mind while making one? Since there will be gases that will be released during the process of production, a plastic container is the best option. Also, don't screw the bottle too tight, the gases can cause it to explode. Ensure that the container is covered always to keep away fruit flies from getting into it.

WHAT YOU CAN USE YOUR HOME-MADE BIO ENZYMES FOR:

- □ To clean and disinfect all surfaces in the house
- To purify air and remove bad odour
- □ To break down grease and grime
- To de-clog drains
- □ To remove limescale on taps and other steel appliances
- To remove pesticides and harmful chemicals from fruit and vegetables
- To clean and freshen clothing and footwear
- □ To be spray as a natural pesticide and herbicide
- To nourish the hair and skin of pets
- To keep cockroaches and mosquitoes away
- To purify groundwater

The worsening conditioning of the environment has called for an urgent need to move towards natural and sustainable living. If you're one that's impatient to wait a month and longer, most organic stores sell bio-enzyme cleaners, so go ahead and buy one. At a time when Hyderabad is under the threat of harmful chemicals contaminating our water and land, this is definitely one step we can take towards helping the planet heal.

Before Middle Class Melodies, Vinod wrote stories belonging to diverse genres and started pitching them to pro-ducers, but to no avail. "By default I could write stories which are serious in nature and it turned out to be a difficult proposition to convince pro-ducers with them. It was around this time, I decided to write a light-hearted drama along with my buddy Janardhan Pasumarthi. We first considered the title Middle Class Melodies. There was an inherent story and a theme in the title. So we thought of doing something from it and started developing it. The film is not a single protagonist story; other characters around him have significant impor-tance. All these characters were borrowed from real people's lives around us. We later bundled them into a thematic connection," he shares Vinod is quick to inform that the story is not in a usual format, which is why it took him and Janardhan two years to get it green-lighted. "It's got a new flavor and is a realistic comedy.

of this nature. Bhavya Creations later endorsed it," he recalls, adding that while doing short films, he was aware of Tharun's work in the short films arena, so was the Pellichoopulu director of his. "However, we didn't know each other personally. My friend Raviteja Girijala, who edited my film, worked as an editor for Tharun's films Pellichoopulu and Ee Nagarinika Emaindi. It was he who helped me forge a bond with Tharun." In the film, Anand plays a

Except for the lead pair, the film's supporting roles have been played by fresh faces like Chaitanya Garikapati, Divya Sripada, Goparaju Ramana, Surabhi Prabhavathi, Prem Sagar and Prabhavathi Varma. It was the story diktat, Vinod observes. "As I was attempting a realistic comedy, I wanted the audiences to connect to characters like their neighbours or their own. If popular supporting actors played those roles, it would give the feeling of watching a cinema, which I didn't want. I had to audition many actors from theatre groups of Guntur and Tenali for the parts and it took three months of time. The workshops followed soon after."

Fish with human-like face spotted in Malaysia

 $N^{\hbox{ature surprises us in different ways, with the variation and Pevolution among species being one of the most beautiful$ secrets. There are a number of species of flora and fauna available on our planet that are nowhere near to the concept of species we have in mind. One of these species is the Trigger Fish. A Twitter user recently surprised netizens with a picture of a weird-looking fish captured in Malaysia. What makes this fish different from other species is its human-like features, including mouth with lips and teeth. Ever since the picture was posted online, it went viral leaving people astonished at the fish. The post has received a lot of traction, with around 14 thousand likes and eight thousand comments. While some people compared their faces to the fish. others added some more human beauty features to the fish. For those who are unaware, this fish is known as Trigger Fish. The species, abundantly found in the Indo-Pacific region, can be easily spotted in South East Asian water bodies. While there are 40 different species of the Trigger Fish found in the water bodies, most of these have an oval-shaped body with a large head. They are known for their strong- jawed mouth and teeth, capable enough to crush shells. These are known as Trigger Fish as they have two dorsal spines out of which the anterior one can be ejected only when the second one is depressed, which is also known as 'trigger' spine.

Earth's atmosphere is ringing like a bell!

Arecent study by scientists at Kyoto University and the University of Hawai'i at M?noa shows that the Earth's entire atmosphere vibrates analogously. In the case of the atmosphere, the "music" comes not as a sound we could hear: instead, it is in the form of large scale waves of atmospheric pressure spreading over the globe and traveling around the equator, some moving east-to-west and others west-to-east Every one of these waves is a resonant vibration of the global atmosphere, practically equivalent to one of the resounding nitches of a hell

In a new study. scientists present a detailed analysis of observed atmospheric pressure over the alobe every hour for 38 years. The results revealed the presence of dozens of the predicted wave modes. Scientists mainly focused on waves with periods between 2 hours and 33 hours, which travel horizontally through the atmosphere, moving all around the world at 700 miles per hour. Lead author Takatoshi Sakazaki said, "For these rapidly moving wave modes, our observed frequencies and global patterns match those theoretically predicted very well. It is exciting to see the vision of Laplace and other pioneering physicists so completely validated after two centuries.
