Challenging times for LGBT+ Indians due to Covid-19 pandemic

Economic burden on LGBT+ communities

In a year unlike any other, as lockdowns and social distancing were implemented, the LGBTQ+ community found themselves ill-prepared to deal with the financial burden caused by the unprecedented pandemic. Many faced not only the loss of their jobs but also the lack of safety nets such as government assistance or community support systems.

Some had to rely on savings or small informal loans, while others found themselves working odd jobs or engaging in new forms of self-employment to make ends meet. The lockdowns also led to an increase in unemployment, with many losing their regular incomes due to the closure of businesses and shops.

The pandemic also highlighted the lack of legal recognition and protection for the LGBTQ+ community, as many faced discrimination and prejudice from employers and the general public. This made it even more challenging for them to find work or access basic necessities.

Despite these challenges, the LGBTQ+ community continued to find ways to support each other, with community-run initiatives providing essential services and support to those in need.

Psychological distress

The lockdowns and social distancing measures also took a toll on the mental health of the LGBTQ+ community. Many faced increased stress, anxiety, and isolation, with some experiencing a heightened sense of vulnerability and fear.

The lack of social support and the inability to engage in traditional forms of social interaction made it even more difficult for the LGBTQ+ community to cope with the psychological challenges posed by the pandemic.

Government response

The Indian government has taken some steps to address the needs of the LGBTQ+ community during the pandemic. The Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, for example, has provided financial assistance to transgender persons and transgenders who were affected by the lockdowns.

The government has also recognized the need for specialized mental health services for the LGBTQ+ community, with efforts being made to provide targeted support and resources.

Despite these efforts, many LGBTQ+ individuals continue to face significant challenges and may require additional support to fully recover from the effects of the pandemic.

Crying shame

The brutal custodial death of two men in Tamil Nadu has given us our five-minute moment. Book erect cop, now.

The ugly face of brutality and the killing rage of the Indian state rears its head. When we are moving videographically on the excesses in our own backyard, namely Tamil Nadu. A few days after Nizamuddin in Tadepalligudem, who were booked for running their shop 15 minutes beyond closure during lockdown — a refusal by the authorities — ended up dead after the local police subjected them to a long, brutal and sustained interrogation. These are the real horror stories. For the latter, the police were released on parole, booked under Section 307 (Disobeying the time restrictions ordered by a public servant), Section 309 (by threat and Section 306 (Criminal intimidation). However, disobeying Section 188 is not a crime or state. From the family’s standpoint, it is only a custodial torture. Apart from that, there were no witnesses to back up the need for such action. The MIB report took almost five days to arrive to the site of the gut. And then they died within hours for lack of critical care. However, believing that has happened for the first time in the ignominy of the ages and custodial deaths that common citizens have faced for the exercise of the police. Particularly, in the last level of administration, the police system has internalised the right to be the judge, jury and executioner when the protocols pursuing across the globe concern defacing brutality, it is high time, too. India, too, takes up the torches, raises its voice against violations and makes a common cause with the family of Jayalai and Bansi. For sure, the number of victims and keep rising. During the lockdown necessitated by the pandemic, instances of excessive use of force by the police have become more common news. Cases where the officers have been overpowered, vehicle and motorcycle pillion riders beaten mercilessly. Migrant workers on long treks have not been spared the humiliation and injury either. Anyone without the power to defend or stand up for himself is a victim of the putting the onus of suffering upon the citizen. And while the cases drag on in courts, the offenders would never be put on trial. The death of the police in another part of the country has been reduced to a malleable tool of the powers that be and is increasingly being used to serve their political will and agenda. Over the last few years, police-civilian confrontations have garnered a lot of media attention, especially in cases with a communal dimension. As those involving protests against the Citizenship Amendment Act (CAA) and the National Register of Citizens (NRC) in Assam, the most disturbing, and in which police officers were found guilty of violent excesses. In Assam, the police have been accused of using excessive force, including use of tear gas and rubber bullets, to disperse peaceful protests. The police have been found to have used “under siege” incidents to their advantage, deploying their military capabilities for mowing down protests and intimidating protesters. However, there is nothing without having to suffer a single drop of blood. The police must be held accountable for their actions and the infrastructures and capability are used for their military in their multiple roles. Such repression can create havocs in civic and political spheres. Recently, when Australian Prime Minister Scott Morrison was accused of “kicking a dead dog” by a Tamil Nadu state cabinet officer, the Indian government was not the only one to raise its voice. Several government officials, private businesses, and members of the public expressed their disapproval of the Indian government’s handling of the situation. The situation in India is a perfect example of the need for a paradigm shift in the way we approach our policies and priorities. The government needs to prioritize the well-being and rights of its citizens, and take swift action to address this issue. In conclusion, it is essential for the government to take immediate steps to address the situation in Tamil Nadu and ensure the safety and rights of all citizens. This requires a commitment to transparency, accountability, and respect for human rights. It is only through such actions that we can foster a society that truly values and protects the rights of all its members.

In the context of the recent earthquake in Indonesia, the women of Wanoja provided us with a glimpse of the resilience of women in the face of adversity. Their stories are a testament to their strength and determination.

The COVID-19 pandemic has affected the lives of women in various ways. The lockdowns have limited their access to financial resources, education, and healthcare. Despite these challenges, the women of Wanoja have found ways to adapt and continue their work. They have taken on new roles and responsibilities, and their contributions have been vital.

US cases top 2.5m, reopenings paused

As cases surge, rural areas seeing increases as well

Washington: For many states and cities in the US, the dark days of the early part of the Covid-19 pandemic are returning, with 2.5 million cases and a rise in infections more than doubling in recent weeks, causing an increase in restrictions on movement and gatherings. By Friday, the number of confirmed cases had passed the 2.5 million mark, with an additional 60,000 cases reported in the last 24 hours. The rise in cases has prompted many states to consider reimposing restrictions on businesses and indoor gatherings.

The surging numbers have led to a number of states considering stricter measures. In California, Governor Gavin Newsom announced plans to roll back reopenings due to a sudden spike in cases. In Texas, Mayor of Houston, Sylvester Turner, has announced a new set of restrictions on businesses to combat the rising trend of infections.

We are all naturalists and love to dig for ourselves and fall in love with nature. We are all a part of the forest, and therefore, we need to become one. The forest is trying to teach us how to connect with the forest inhabitants to create this forest atmosphere. We need to be in tune with this and make the forest a happy place to live in. We need to move in harmony with the forest and understand its language.

There is a chain reaction that happens in the forest. When there are changes in the forest, there are changes in the wild life and in the atmosphere. There is a balance that needs to be maintained in order to have a healthy forest. The forest is trying to teach us how to live in harmony with each other and maintain this balance.

How do you conceptualize the forest?

We have been making a small series about the forest's changing seasons. We are trying to capture the forest in its different states and show how it changes with the seasons. We are trying to capture the forest's beauty and show how it changes with the seasons.

The series is set in three of the most seasonally changeable landscapes on earth. Can you explain how these seasonal changes affect the wildlife there?

Fundamentally, there are changes about animal reproduction and they need to find a place to live in nature. It's a seasonal cycle. We are trying to capture the forest's beauty and show how it changes with the seasons.

The series is a call to the audience and most importantly a call to action. We need to take action to save the forest and preserve its beauty. We need to be in tune with the forest and understand its language. The forest is trying to teach us how to live in harmony with each other and maintain this balance.

What are the challenges and difficulties faced while shooting the series?

One of the biggest challenges that we have faced is our location. We are shooting in different parts of the world, and it is a big challenge to capture the forest's beauty in each location. We need to be in tune with the forest and understand its language. We need to be in harmony with the forest and understand its language.

We are trying to capture the forest's beauty and show how it changes with the seasons. We are trying to capture the forest's beauty and show how it changes with the seasons.

What are some of the remarkable natural features captured in this series?

So many magnificent natural features are captured in this series. We are trying to capture the forest's beauty and show how it changes with the seasons. We are trying to capture the forest's beauty and show how it changes with the seasons.

Are you sleeping right?

Our sleep patterns have been compromised by lockdown-induced anxieties. Experts advise us to follow a good night and routine, exercise adequately and avoid excess coffee and alcohol.

Sleep duration: Time period where the person is actually sleeping in (N1, N2, N3, R phase of the sleep cycle).

Sleep quality: During this time, I have seen more than 100 different sleep patterns and it is quite challenging to find a pattern that works for everyone. This series is about the importance of a good night and routine.

Wake up time: The time taken to fall asleep and the time it took to fall asleep have gradually increased over the lockdown. I have been retaining access across all age groups. This series is about the importance of a good night and routine.

Naps: Initially, the number of naps increased, but it declined in the last few months. This series is about the importance of a good night and routine.

Sleep levels: Autonomous nervous system activity measured through heart rate variability. This series is about the importance of a good night and routine.

The widening gap

When the COVID-19 pandemic hit India, it brought to light the existing inequalities and disparities that exist in the country. The pandemic highlighted the need for a more equitable and just society, where everyone has access to basic necessities and opportunities. The pandemic also showed the importance of social and economic policies that address the needs of the marginalized and vulnerable populations.

The pandemic has exposed the existing inequalities in the country, highlighting the need for a more equitable and just society. The pandemic has brought to light the disparities in access to healthcare, education, and economic opportunities, with the most vulnerable populations being affected the most.

The pandemic has also underscored the importance of social and economic policies that address the needs of the marginalized and vulnerable populations. The government has announced various initiatives and schemes to alleviate the impact of the pandemic on these populations, but more needs to be done to ensure that everyone has access to basic necessities and opportunities.

Lazio comeback to keep races alive

I fiu fought back from a goal down to beat Udinese in the final minute of a five-goal thriller, setting up a second successive match next season from which he will soon have to gear his team's success or failure.

Ciao immorally prevented a penalty to cancel and French midfielder Ceballos' Lazio hopes of claiming a first league title since 2009-10 looked slim in the 21st minute. The Spaniard's yellow card for his first foul following the final whistle means his first match back following the ban due to the coronavirus pandemic.

And it seemed as if it was going to go far for when Hickey claimed the sponsor following a magnificent solo run in the 23rd minute.

But Intispor, who was leading the game in the goal, leading away, converted a penalty in the 57th in his 28th season and ignored a meta-connection to narrow the lead.
