One year of ills

The PM may still be popular in the aftermath of the verdict, but he needs to take bold moves in managing a pandemic-bitten nation. An expert panel says his delay in making constitutional changes is the fault of nebulous thought processes. The call to act borne out of the beginning of the second wave. One resulting factor is the delay is seen to be a lack of personal leadership from the PM. The prolonged period of the crisis will be a big challenge for him. His government will have to act soon if it wants to break the pandemic's grip.

The age of judicial populism

How did judicial activism evolve into populism? And does the judiciary really represent the people’s will and interests more than the elected politicians?

The terms "judicial activism" is much talked about in recent years. What is it that is being talked about? It is the undue influence of the Supreme Court on the political process. The processes have not been able to implement the will of the people through constitutional means and instead have been taking on the role of the legislature. This has been a trend that is being talked about by various experts and scholars.

The Supreme Court of India is the highest court in the country and is supposed to be independent of political influence. However, in recent years, there have been several instances where the Supreme Court has intervened in political matters and taken decisions that are seen as political. This has led to concerns about the judiciary’s role in the democratic process.

One of the key concerns is the practice of "judicial activism," where judges are seen as taking a more active role in political matters than their constitutional role. This has raised questions about the independence of the judiciary and its role in the democratic process.

Some experts argue that the Supreme Court’s role in political matters has been necessary to counteract the growing influence of political parties and to ensure that the rule of law is upheld. However, others argue that this practice has gone too far and that the judiciary is encroaching on the role of the legislature.

Another concern is the appointment of judges to the Supreme Court. The process of appointing judges has been seen as skewed in favor of incumbent politicians and has led to concerns about the independence of the judiciary.

In summary, the age of judicial populism has led to questions about the role of the judiciary in the democratic process. It has raised concerns about the independence of the judiciary and its role in political matters. It has also led to questions about the appointment of judges to the Supreme Court.
