Kanimozhi, MP and daughter of late K. Kamaraj, has charged that the excavation at Keezhadi in Tamil Nadu has been closed down by the government. "The excavation of Keezhadi has to be continued absolutely. It is a scientific project and has to be continued," she said.

"The government has suddenly closed down the excavation site. Scientifically, it is not possible to close down the excavation. The excavation was being done in the presence of scientific experts. The government has been running away from the excavation to avoid the scientific findings," she said.

The Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) had earlier granted permission for the excavation. The government had asked the ASI to conduct an in situ excavation of Keezhadi to find the real history of the site. However, the Keezhadi excavation was terminated by the government, she said.

"From the result what they expect. They were keeping the Keezhadi excavation going on to find the truth about the site and its history. The excavation had to be continued and it should be continued," she said.

The Keezhadi excavation was carried out by the Tamil Nadu Archaeological Department and the ASI. The excavation was conducted from 2013 to 2016, and the results were expected to shed light on the history of the site.

Meanwhile, the government has said that the excavation at Keezhadi will continue. The government has also said that the excavation will be conducted in a scientific manner and that the findings will be made public.

India must scale up diplomacy now and avoid another flare-up

If it is not yet the turn of the 21st century and China has not started its transition, then the first since 1975 and one where both sides lost most of their military and political credibility. The second wave of the Cold War has started. The Indian government has been caught napping.

India's defence ministry during the Indo-China war of 1962 and the 1979-1986 Soviet invasion of Afghanistan has been exposed to the hoodwinking and deception. It has no option other than to seek to contain China's aggression, which has not yet been brought to an end.

In the wake of the Indian government's decision to increase its military capacity and resources, the LAC must be brought to an end. This means that India must also scale up its diplomacy now and avoid another flare-up.

The road to war is paved with good intentions. War is not inevitable, but it is the result of a series of decisions made by individuals and governments. The Indian government must take the lead in bringing about a peaceful resolution to the current crisis.

A new work module

The four-day week is an idea whose time may have come but it is not a magic bullet. Companies don’t hire more people just to spread the work around — they hire to grow.

A good day at the office can be just that: a good day at the office. People can be productive in shorter periods and still get the job done. The goal is not to work less but to work smarter.

India's major domestic firms have already signed up for the multilateral instrument (OECD) to arrive at a so-called BEPS (base erosion and profit shifting) framework agreement.

The government has already allowed for tax credits that can be claimed on R&D expenditures, but more needs to be done.

The Indian government, like its counterparts around the world, has been under pressure to crack down on tax avoidance by multinational companies.

The OECD has already approved a framework for BEPS, but India has been one of the few countries to resist signing up.

The BEPS framework aims to ensure that profits from intangible assets are taxed in the country where they are created, rather than in the country of the ultimate parent company.

The framework also seeks to prevent the use of hybrids and other abusive tax structures to shift profits away from high-tax countries.

The framework includes a mandatory jurisdictional approach, which means that every country is responsible for the taxation of profits generated in its jurisdiction, regardless of the domicile of the ultimate parent company.

The OECD's report on BEPS, released in 2015, identified that companies had shifted hundreds of billions of dollars in profits to low-tax jurisdictions.

The report highlighted the need for countries to work together to ensure that profits are taxed in the countries where they are generated, rather than in countries where the ultimate parent company is located.

The framework includes a list of 13 core elements that need to be implemented in order to address the BEPS issue.

The elements include:

- The level of income generated by a subsidiary should be taxed in the country of the subsidiary.
- The level of income generated by a subsidiary should be taxed in the country of the ultimate parent company.
- The level of income generated by a subsidiary should be taxed in the country where the ultimate parent company is registered.

The framework also includes a list of 13 principles that need to be implemented in order to address the BEPS issue.

N Korea blows up inter-Korean office, raising tensions

A NORTH Korean agency has blown up a building housing an inter-Korean liaison office, in a move that is likely to worsen relations between the erstwhile rivals.

The North Korean government had earlier warned of retaliation after South Korea’s decision to close the liaison office, which was opened in 2018 to facilitate talks between the two Koreas.

The explosion on Tuesday came just hours after North Korean leader Kim Jong Un had threatened to take “stronger action” against Seoul if it did not reverse its decision to close the liaison office.

The liaison office, which was established in 2018 as part of a peace agreement between the Koreas, was located in the border town of Kaesong, which is on the North Korean side of the demilitarized zone that divides the two countries.

The South Korean government had said that it would close the liaison office as a response to North Korea’s recent threats and provocations.

Several South Korean officials have warned that the move could trigger a new round of tensions between the Koreas, which have been engaged in a series of verbal and military provocations over the past few months.

It is unclear what specific actions North Korea may take in response to Seoul’s decision to close the liaison office.

However, the move is likely to be seen as a further indication of the deterioration of relations between the two Koreas, which have been strained by a series of disputes over issues such as the North’s nuclear and missile programs.

Despite recent efforts to improve relations, including a summit between the two leaders in September 2018, the Koreas have yet to make meaningful progress in resolving these issues.

The explosion on Tuesday is likely to further complicate the already tense situation on the Korean Peninsula, and could trigger a new round of tensions between the two Koreas.
