Clean fuel bid slowed by cooks' belief in firewood, finds study

The University of Washington's India India and China are fighting to control the world's supply of multiple desirable raw materials: food, rare earths, fossil fuels, and water. But there is another commodity that is equally important: clean cooking.

Clean cooking is crucial for anyone who wants to achieve a sustainable and healthy society. It helps reduce air pollution and its impacts on climate change. It also helps to improve health outcomes, especially for women and children.

India has a long history of using firewood for cooking. But this tradition is changing. In recent years, India has been trying to switch to cleaner fuels, such as modern stoves and cleaning cookstoves.

But these changes have been slow, and many cooks are resistant to the change. They believe that firewood is a natural resource that is free and plentiful. They also fear that the new fuels will be too expensive or that the stoves will be too complicated to use.

The problem is that the change to clean cooking is not about the technology. It is about the culture. It is about changing the way people think about cooking and about their relationship to the environment.

For many cooks, the switch to clean cooking is not about the convenience or the cost. It is about the comfort and the familiarity. It is about the tradition.

The change to clean cooking is not just about cooking. It is about the whole way of life. It is about the way people think about their place in the world. It is about the way they think about their relationship to the planet.

Bihar tug of war

Tejashwi chases BJP and Nitish to the finish line and proves he is here to stay. BJP scores with Modi magic

The skies turned a brilliant bright blue in Bihar after several weeks of heavy monsoon showers. It was a welcome respite from the rain and a sign that life was returning to normal. However, beneath the blue sky, a political tug of war was unfolding in the state. The two main contenders, Nitish Kumar and Bhupesh Baghel, were locked in a fierce battle for power.

Nitish Kumar, the long-time leader of the state, was facing a strong challenge from Tejashwi Yadav, the son of former Bihar Chief Minister Lalu Prasad Yadav. Tejashwi had emerged as a formidable opposition leader and was determined to unseat Nitish's Janata Dal United (JD(U)) government. The state assembly elections were scheduled to be held in two phases, with the first phase on October 28 and the second phase on November 7.

The campaign was intense, with both candidates油漆刷作出了巨大的努力 to win the hearts and minds of the voters. Nitish, with his experience and popularity, had a strong base in the state. However, Tejashwi, with his promises of social justice and equality, was able to attract a large number of voters, especially the young and the poor.

The election results were a close contest, with both candidates able to claim a victory. In the end, it was a tie, with neither candidate winning an absolute majority. The situation was set for a possible recount or a floor test in the Bihar Assembly.

In the meantime, the focus shifted to the national political landscape. The Lok Sabha elections were scheduled to be held in April-May 2023, and the party leaders were already preparing for the impending battle. The fate of Nitish, Tejashwi, and their respective parties would be decided in the months ahead, as they fought for survival and for the future of Bihar.

Vaccine politics

Trump is challenging the timing of Pfizer's COVID vaccine as politically motivated, says he is being robbed of credit due to him

President Donald Trump has launched a fresh assault on the Pfizer-BioNTech COVID-19 vaccine, insisting that it should not be approved until after the election and that his administration will buy the vaccine once it is approved. He accused the company of politically motivated behavior and said that the vaccine should be made available to the American public after the election.

Joe Biden, the Democratic nominee, has been a strong proponent of the vaccine and is expected to make it available to all Americans as soon as it is approved. The vaccine has been a key issue in the campaign, with both candidates vying for credit for its development and rollout.

Trump's comments came as the United States continues to struggle with the COVID-19 pandemic, with over 9 million cases and over 230,000 deaths. The vaccine is seen as a major weapon in the fight against the virus, and its availability and distribution are crucial to the country's recovery.

The vaccine politics have also become a key issue in the upcoming election, with both candidates vying for credit for the vaccine and the response to the pandemic. Trump's attacks on the Pfizer vaccine are likely to be a key issue in the campaign, as voters are looking for a leader who can handle the pandemic effectively.

One of the reasons for the extensive increase in oils in the market is edible and harmful.

Preservatives added during the refining process are bad for our digestive system and can potentially cause cancers, gastric problems and tumours.

Increased variation and quality in edible oil can affect our respiratory system.

The high temperature involved in refining process removes all the natural and beneficial substances from it increasing the trans-fat which is detrimental to your heart's health.

The market is full of refined oils, telling you they’re good for your girls. You also hear that unrefined oils are the best. But what is the truth? Dr Haseeb Jafferi, a pharmacognosist, is conversation with The Pioneer’s K RAMYA SREE about the oil's role and refining.
