Reigning world champion PV Sindhu became only the second Indian woman to win two Olympic medals, securing a bronze after a straight-game win over Nozomi Okuhara of Japan in the women’s singles third-place play-off here.

“I think I’ve done really well. But overall, I had to close off my emotions. I’m really happy and I think I’ve done really well. It’s a proud moment getting a bronze medal for my country,” Sindhu, who has returned with a haul of two medals from the Tokyo Games at a cost of $175 million, said after the triumph which came only three days after she had finished a disappointing fourth in the women’s singles.

“It makes me feel really happy because I worked hard for the last four years. I was on the verge of tears but I wanted to bring the silver to the state. It’s a good momentum for the future,” said Sindhu.

The Telangana State cabinet has decided to provide Rs 8 lakh as income to Telangana coach Aditya Thakur for helping Sindhu clinch a bronze medal after a straight-game win over Nozomi Okuhara of Japan in the women’s singles third-place play-off here.

A new beginning?

The ACTE plans to do away with mandatory maths and physics for the engineering exam development in the field of education is raising some concern in the minds of people. The NITI Aayog has backed the proposal of the All India Council for Technical Education (ATEC) to revive the national engineering entrance examination that no longer requires mathematics and physics as mandatory subjects in plus-two. Students will need to pass any of the 14 subjects, including mathematics, physics and chemistry, in their plus-two examination. The logic given is that the industry and a section of the students want the option to pursue technical programmes like agriculture, electronics, or IT, that do not require maths and physics. The AICTE proposal, if implemented, will allow students to choose subjects that align closely with their future goals and make them employable elsewhere. Students do not opt for colleges where minimum mathematics and science are not taught and the graduates do not get jobs. Thirdly, as aspirations grow, the students prefer other nationally acclaimed engineering institutions or diversify into new technical fields. Critics feel that the AICTE proposal can benefit new engineering institutions run by private players. Technical education programmes are diversifying as innovators, wine taster, cybersecurity specialist, processed food specialist, self-employability and growth manager. LinkedIn came up with a tool that allowed users to share their skills and accomplishments. Some of them have done with engineering but with tangential links to mathematics or physics. This can give a new prop to those institutions. Babul saw it coming or not, but the BJP's Bengal unit is in disarray. It does not have any popular face to portray. NAURU: SEALED SETBACK

We may end up having to do deep-sea mining but still have to weigh the environmental costs.

GYNIHEE DYER

A month ago, it seemed like a viable and cost-effective way of tackling battery shortages and providing a near-endless supply of useful materials. But now, following the recent collapse of the mining industry in Nauru, it is clear that we have not yet understood the risks posed by deep-sea mining.

The mining company was shut down, but in the process of clearing the lease holder's estates, amongst the debris, a large number of valuable minerals, copper, cobalt, manganese and rare earths - all to be found in vast quantities in polygonal nodules - on some of the deep-sea seas. So Deependm together with partners launched a lawsuit. However, the court has not yet made its decision.

If you have to feel sorry for Nauro, it's only the size of its population. In just two years of getting a such a request, the country is unprepared. The current mining permit can only go so far. We need to look at the legal aspects.

One feels sorry for Vancouver-based Deependm, which just wants to develop a sustainable mining operation in Nauru. The country has no resources left worth mentioning.

A moratorium is the right way to go, and Deependm has inadvertently raised the question of how to proceed with the rest of the world.

It is no exaggeration that most of the recent rally in the stock market has been driven by the ‘herd mentality’. The current investors are obese (or at least they have extra pounds), and it has no resources left worth mentioning.

POST IPO PERFORMANCE: STILL DETAINED

It is no exaggeration that most of the recent rally in the stock market has been driven by the ‘herd mentality’. The current investors are obese (or at least they have extra pounds), and it has no resources left worth mentioning.

One feels less sorry for Vancouver-based Deependm, which just wants to develop a sustainable mining operation in Nauru. The country has no resources left worth mentioning.
