Kejriwal Govt pushing youths to alcoholism to raise revenue: BJP

The Delhi Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) President Adesh Gupta said the Kejriwal Government is pushing youths towards alcoholism to increase its own revenue. Present at the protest against the new excise policy here near Shahdara bus terminal on Tuesday, he said on policy here near Shahdara bus terminal on Tuesday, he said:

Addressing a massive protest against the new excise policy here near Shahdara bus terminal on Tuesday, he said: The Delhi BJPs has introduced an excise policy that would increase its own revenue. The new policy has lowered the drinking age from 25 to 21 years.

Gupta said not only will it lead to greater liquor and promiscuous crimes but will also lead to alcoholism among youths. He said the Kejriwal government has lowered the drinking age from 25 to 21 years, which would have been the right government policy to make Delhi safe for women and keeping youths away from the liquor. It seems the Kejriwal government has taken the revenue more than safety of women or saving the younger generation from falling into this habit, he charged.

If BJP makes drinking age 25 yrs in its ruled States, we will make 30 years:

Sourabh Bharadwaj on Tuesday said that if the Aam Aadmi Party (AAP) Government in Delhi makes the drinking age 25 yrs in its ruled States, then the BJP would make 30 years.

The AAP leader said that the AAP leaders’ policy was that the age of drinking alcohol in the whole country should be 25 years. But the AAP has not made any political policy so far. Within the last 15 years, in 21 years in Delhi, current MLA Jitender Madan, local president of the Aam Aadmi Party, accused of drink and driving, was arrested.

Winning the upcoming Delhi Assembly elections, the Aam Aadmi Party will make the drinking age 21 years, he added. Bharadwaj challenged the Delhi Chief Minister Arvind Kejriwal and AAP Ramvir Singh, with him were party vice president Umar Khalid, district president Master Vinod, Pravesh Sharma, Mahajan, district president Bidhuri, MLA Jitender Madan, local president of the Aam Aadmi Party, accused of drink and driving, was arrested.

The Delhi Government’s decision to overhaul its excise policy is a win-win for all the stakeholders.

In a move that sent spirits in the Capital soaring, the Aam Aadmi Party (AAP) Government has decided to bring about major changes in its antiquated excise policy. These changes include lowering the minimum age for consumption of liquor for 18 years to 20 years (from 25 years), ending the retail alcohol business, introducing a lobbyist system to boost Delhi’s revenue, cracking down on bootlegging and improving user experience. These reforms were a long time coming, because with Delhi being a major tourist destination, it needs to make access to alcohol a pleasant experience for the people. And to achieve this, in 2010, when the minimum age in a majority of the States in India was 21, why should the National Capital be regressive? Now, young consumers are more likely to drink in public, which is why the Delhi Government is looking out for the revenue without being able to prevent the drinking from going on.

Now the onus is on the AAP Government to ensure that underage drinking does not become a menace and there is a major and stringent crackdown on driving under influence. The younger generation must be taught to drink responsibly. The AAP Government has made it clear that those under the age of 21 will not be allowed inside restaurants serving liquor if they are alone or in an underage group. Though the international concept of ‘Age Gap’ will be introduced in India for the first time to prevent underage drinking, with the 20’s being made along with the industry, only time will tell whether the Government’s efforts will bear fruit. For those who argue who will encourage youngsters to imbibe liquor at an age younger than parents, the only thing one can say is that parents need to be more responsible.

With the above changes in the policy, the Delhi Government is facing strong opposition from the liquor shops and is under pressure from the state government, which is helping them to get away lightly for women buyers. The new policy is a win-win for all, including the Government which will also be able to mop up additional revenue.

The Delhi Government has decided to lower the minimum age for consumption of liquor from 25 years to 20 years. This move is expected to boost Delhi’s revenue, as the Government is looking at an additional revenue of over Rs 100 crores from the excise department. The move is also expected to reduce the sale of bootlegged liquor, as the Government is looking at cracking down on this practice. The new policy is expected to bring about a change in the drinking culture in Delhi, as the Government is looking at a reduction in the number of road accidents and crimes related to alcohol.

The Government has also decided to introduce a lobbyist system to boost Delhi’s revenue, as the Government is looking at an additional revenue of over Rs 200 crores from the lobbyist system. The lobbyist system is expected to bring about a change in the drinking culture in Delhi, as the Government is looking at a reduction in the number of road accidents and crimes related to alcohol.

Shri Almwal was sitting outside a shop in Lucknow, surveying the street in preparation for the morning coffee run when he heard a commotion ahead of him. A group of children were playing football on the sidewalk, their laughter carrying over the busy city sounds. Shri Almwal was known in the neighborhood for his warm smile and eager to engage with others, he quickly approached the group.

“Hello there, young men,” he called out, drawing their attention. The children, intrigued by the unusual visitor, stopped their game and turned to face him. Shri Almwal went on to ask them about their school and hobbies, fostering a sense of community and connection with the young boys.

Meanwhile, in the background, the sound of honking cars and buzzing smartphones filled the air. Life in Lucknow was bustling as ever, but Shri Almwal remained steadfast in his mission to bring a sense of unity and goodwill to the city. His every step was a testament to the power of positive action and the importance of fostering connections with those around us. And as he walked away, leaving behind smiles and laughter in his wake, Shri Almwal knew that his work was far from over. He continued to strive for a better Lucknow, inviting everyone to join in the journey of creating a more inclusive and connected community.
Tzugn Munson’s military junta on Tuesday took the extraordinary step of releasing all coup suspects and subsequent actions against those opposed to it, including the arrest of its senior officials.

The move, announced by the capital’s spokesman, indicated the military had finally resorted to drastic measures to quell the protests.

The news came as the situation in Myanmar continued to deteriorate, with reports of a large-scale military operation in the border region of Shan State.

Many of the protesters who were detained by the military on Monday were released on Tuesday, including some who had been held for several days or weeks. According to local media, over 100 protesters had been arrested by the military in recent days.

The minister of state for finance said the disinvestment plan was driven by the need to improve the corporate capital of the country and to enhance the transparency and accountability of public sector companies.

India’s disinvestment drive has been ongoing since the late 1990s, with the government selling minority stakes in public sector units to raise resources and improve their financial health. The recent announcements have been part of a larger programme to reduce the government’s holding in public sector enterprises and focus on core operations.

As per the minister, the government’s disinvestment efforts were aimed at improving the governance and financial performance of these entities. The recent disinvestments, he said, would bring in fresh capital and help these companies to become more globally competitive.

The government has been under pressure to find ways to reduce its fiscal deficit and improve the country’s credit rating. Disinvestment is seen as one such avenue to achieve these objectives.

However, the minister also stressed that disinvestment was not the only solution and that other measures, such as structural reforms and improvement in economic policies, were also necessary to address these challenges.

The minister said the government would continue to monitor the disinvestment process closely and ensure that it is in line with the overall economic objectives.

Collaborative learning is key

Edtech is going to play a pivotal role in solving challenges for higher education institutes, says DR RL RAINA

The University of Edinburgh

The University of Edinburgh has launched a new programme to encourage collaboration and innovation in teaching and learning. The programme, called Edinburgh Collaborative Learning (EdCL), is designed to support educators in developing effective collaborative learning strategies and practices.

EdCL is an online resource that provides a range of tools and resources to help educators design and deliver collaborative learning experiences. The programme offers a variety of resources, including case studies, best practices, and online workshops.

Professor John W. Bransford, director of the Center for the Improvement of Learning and the Human Condition at the University of Washington, said: "Collaborative learning is a powerful tool for enhancing student learning and engagement. The Edinburgh Collaborative Learning programme offers a valuable resource for educators looking to develop effective collaborative learning strategies and practices."

The programme is open to all educators and learners, and is free to access. For more information, visit the Edinburgh Collaborative Learning website.

The number of seats on the 3D designing software of a company is limited. If you get is too big to achieve. For example, if you try to design a large industrial production system and you are not familiar with the 3D designing software, you may face difficulties in designing the system. In such cases, it is recommended to use 3D designing software for smaller industrial production systems. If you are not familiar with the 3D designing software, you should consult with a professional designer to help you with the design process.
