It’s high time we declared medical emergency!

According to a study published in The Lancet, one of the leading medical journals, India has one of the highest number of COVID-19 cases in the world. The study highlights the lack of preparedness and the inadequate response to the pandemic by the government, which has led to a significant increase in the death toll and a massive surge in cases.

Dr. Reddy’s, one of India’s leading pharmaceutical companies, recently called for a medical emergency to be declared in the country. The company has cited the overwhelmed healthcare system, lack of oxygen supplies, and the widespread spread of the virus as reasons for this urgent call.

The President of Dr. Reddy’s, Dr. V. Rama Krishna, warned that the healthcare system is on the verge of collapse and called for immediate action to prevent a deadly situation. "The healthcare system is at breaking point. We need a medical emergency to prevent a catastrophe," Dr. Krishna said.

Other medical professionals and political leaders have also echoed this call, urging the government to take immediate action to address the crisis. "The situation is dire. We need a medical emergency to ensure that we can save lives," said Dr. N. Ramana, former Delhi University Professor of Medicine.

The government, however, has repeatedly refused to declare a medical emergency, citing the need for a balanced approach to managing the pandemic. However, the situation continues to worsen, with hospitals running out of oxygen, and the healthcare system struggling to cope with the surge in cases.

"It’s time to take drastic measures," said Dr. V. Raghuram, a leading expert in public health. "A medical emergency will give us the necessary powers to act quickly and efficiently to save lives."

F "For a while, it seemed India had won the battle. While the pandemic continued to rage elsewhere, India seemed to have turned a corner, with the number of new infections declining sharply. But then the virus re-emerged, overwhelming the healthcare system and leading to the deaths of thousands. The country is now facing a new wave of infections, with the number of cases doubling every few days. The situation is dire, with hospitals running out of oxygen and beds. The government has announced several measures to contain the spread of the virus, but it seems to be losing control. Lurching from one crisis to another, the Oil-led unconfused Govt has lost the plot both at home and on the foreign policy front

A common element in Nepal politics has been the absence of clear and unambiguous leadership. The Government has been clueless and far from national leadership. The government’s performance is not impressive either at home or abroad. Intra-party relations are tenuous. It has often faced criticism from the international community for its handling of the COVID-19 pandemic. Nepal has been unable to control the spread of the virus effectively. The government’s actions have been criticized for being haphazard and lacking in coordination.

However, the current government is also facing criticism for its handling of the Nepal-China border crisis. Nepal has been forced to rely on China for financial aid and medical supplies, which has led to concerns about its sovereignty and national dignity. The government’s decision to allow China to use its air space for military exercises has also been met with protests.

Moreover, the government’s handling of the Maoist insurgency has been criticized. The government has been accused of failing to address the root causes of the insurgency, such as poverty and inequality. The government’s efforts to negotiate a peace deal with the Maoists have also been seen as inadequate.

In conclusion, the current government is facing a number of challenges, including weak leadership, a lack of clear policies, and criticism from the international community. The government needs to address these issues if it is to gain the trust of the people and improve its standing on the global stage.

Venturing out during the deadly second wave of the Covid pandemic, even to buy essential items, is today a risky adventure. Thanks to online shopping, buying fresh, organic, and healthy groceries has become easier. Product + price + delivery mix seems to have hit the sweet spot with urban India, writes The Pioneer’s SHIKHA DUGGAL.

It’s no longer only about buying clothes or cosmetics that safely make it to your doorstep. Today, it comes to buying everyday groceries, people are now ordering fresh, organic, and healthy groceries online amid the second wave of the Covid pandemic. FreshFruit/FreshFood’s DFS Daily, the subscription-based e-grocery app, with its service spread across Hyderabad, Bangalore, and Pune, has witnessed a significant increase in orders for fruits and veggies. While shoppers are using it to get banking offers, extra discounts, and special deals on electronics and furniture during the festive season,í and the processes and the business models are now more flexible and have also expanded their offering to groceries too.

“Online grocery shopping has come like a boon for many of us in these times. It means no markets, no hassle, and it is safer too,” says a user who was last working on IT, added: “It just cuts down your time. I have ordered on various apps that have a delivery in 10 minutes, but I have been impressed with FreshFruit/FreshFood’s DFS Daily service.” For instance, several people mentioned that they had ordered fruit and vegetables that were segregated so well in their packaging that they could not even think of returning them.

The best part about online grocery shopping amidst the pandemic is that you can order on the weekend, and the items are delivered the next day. How easy is it? There’s an automated list of items that are segregated so well that even one can just keep on adding to their cart without much hassle — saves a lot of time.

“Come to think of it, the only risk I can think of, currently, is that the stores are very limited online,” she says. “It’s mostly convenient, I don’t have to stick in long queues at the store, and the billing amount gets deducted from my account. How easy is it? There’s an automated list of items that are segregated so well that even one can just keep on adding to their cart without much hassle — saves a lot of time.”

“The platform ensures orders on Sundays and Monday, and the rest of the orders are made towards the end of the week. There’s no variation in the prices and the ordering times.”

A lot of the items that are segregated so well are delivered with their expiry dates. “It is successfully making urban India consume fresh and healthy fruits and vegetables.”

The survey also revealed that on Tuesdays, there are fewer orders when compared to Mondays. “This is because on Mondays, the delivery orders are deducted from my card. On Tuesdays, the weekends orders approximately per month across Hyderabad, Bangalore, and Pune.

“The supply chain is maintaining the hygiene at its maximum as the case of fruits and vegetables to the consumers through reliability of supply chain operation streamlining to process the orders.”

The world around us is facing multiple challenges and technology forms a greater part of this change. The ability to purchase items with just a tap and having them delivered form, rather than picking them at the store, is the biggest blessing.

Get on the wagon, it’s a new experience to look forward to a better, a more, healthier tomorrow.
