FIRST COLUMN：CHANGING INNOVATION LANDSCAPE IN INDIA
India needs a futuristic approach to trigger innovation at the base of the pyramid

Abdulrazak Gurnah has been grappling with his African identity and how it relates to the history of migrations and colonization in Eastern Africa.

T he French poet, Rene Char, is quoted as expressing his belief in the power of words in his famous ‘The Broken Vase’ poem: ‘The vase is the pain, the broken vase is the wound, the heart that juice of love.’ It is a poem that holds humanity in its love.

Innovation in India has always been human-centric. We innovate to solve problems, and to create a better future for the common people. Today, the scope of innovation and entrepreneurial spirit across different sectors is mind-boggling. Indian companies and start-ups are actively pursuing innovation and entrepreneurship as career options. India should move from cowed innovation to the open innovation model to embrace the innovation ecosystem and simultaneously be an early adopter of inventions. The mindset change can only be achieved by making open innovation pervasive and fertile ground for input of thought, skill upgrading, and structural support at school and institutional level. As an institutional level, the Ministry of Education has been catalyzing innovation at the All-India Council for Technical Education. In 2018, since the Ministry of Education’s Innovation In Education (MIIE) has taken multiple policy and programmatic initiatives to bring the world’s biggest open innovation model at global stage. The IME works on four pillars of excellence: Policy intervention, including the introduction of ‘innovation in education’ at institution level, R&D and technological assessment and facilitating national and international platforms for Indian and global students. Initiatives like the Innovation Council in higher education institutions and the National Innovation Foundation—India Innovation Promotion Centre have been set up to address this challenge. The National Innovation Foundation—India Innovation Promotion Centre, established as a unique platform to bring together academic and research institutions in India and abroad. The organization aims to promote innovation in education and entrepreneurship. This is to build an innovative ecosystem and to make the country’s innovation and entrepreneurship in the current educational landscape.
