With the probe, the Indian National Congress, which has been in power for most of the last 80 years, has a second chance to get back into power in India's state elections. The party is already facing a leadership crisis after its poor performance in the last general election, and the ongoing probe could put further strain on its ranks.

The probe, led by former Delhi Chief Minister Sheila Dixit, is investigating the activities of Swiss bank UBS, which is currently domiciled in the Indian state of Kerala. The investigation was prompted by a leak of information from the bank's tax evasion cases in Switzerland.

The probe has already resulted in the arrest of two senior Indian government officials, including the Enforcement Directorate (ED) chief. The ED has also seized assets worth $10 million from the bank.

The probe is expected to last for at least six months, and it could have far-reaching implications for the Indian political landscape. The party is already facing a leadership crisis after its poor performance in the last general election, and the ongoing probe could put further strain on its ranks.

The probe could also have implications for other Indian political parties, including the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), which is currently in power at the national level. The BJP has already faced criticism for its handling of the economy, and the probe could put further pressure on the party.

The threat to India from Af-Pak terror groups real, imminent

The threat to India from the terror groups from the two countries is real and imminent. The threat from groups like the Haqqani network and the Islamic State Khorasan (IS-K) in Afghanistan is very real and it is a threat that cannot be ignored. The Haqqani network is a terrorist group that has a significant presence in Afghanistan and has been involved in numerous terrorist attacks in the region. The IS-K, on the other hand, is a branch of the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS) and has been active in Afghanistan for several years.

India, however, should not be complacent. It is important to remember that the threat from Af-Pak terror groups is not just limited to the immediate region. The Haqqani network, for instance, has been known to conduct operations in India, and the IS-K has been involved in attacks in India in the past. It is therefore crucial for India to remain vigilant and take appropriate measures to combat this threat.

The Indian government has been taking steps to deal with the threat from Af-Pak terror groups. The Ministry of Home Affairs has been working closely with the intelligence agencies to track and neutralize these terror groups. The government has also been working with the Afghan government to address the root causes of terrorism in that country.

In conclusion, the threat to India from Af-Pak terror groups is real and imminent. The Indian government must remain vigilant and take appropriate measures to combat this threat and ensure the safety and security of its citizens.

Global powers are reacting to the crisis in Afghanistan in different ways, though Pakistan, China and Turkey are going in a different direction.

It is extraordinary that the three NATO partners of the US, which have been fighting the Taliban for over two decades, were today in New Delhi to discuss ways to keep the Taliban at bay. While it may have been a meeting of Afghan scholars and experts, it was also a meeting of three of the world’s leading powers who have been fighting the Taliban for over two decades.

The meeting comes as the Taliban have taken control of Afghanistan, following the withdrawal of US and NATO forces from the country. The Taliban have moved rapidly to consolidate their control, with reports of widespread violence and human rights abuses.

Pakistan and China have both expressed concern about the situation in Afghanistan and have called for a peaceful and stable resolution. Turkey, on the other hand, has maintained a more cautious approach, with President Recep Tayyip Erdogan stating that Turkey would not be involved in direct military operations in Afghanistan.

The meeting in New Delhi is seen as a significant development in the evolving situation in Afghanistan. It is the first high-level meeting between the three countries since the Taliban took control of the country.

Pakistan and China have been long-time allies of the Taliban, and have historically provided support to the group. However, both countries have also expressed concern about the Taliban’s governance and human rights records.

Turkey, meanwhile, has been a vocal critic of the Taliban, and has called for a peaceful transition to power in Afghanistan. Erdogan has also expressed interest in working with the Taliban to stabilise the country.

The meeting in New Delhi is likely to focus on ways to work together to ensure stability and peace in Afghanistan. It is also likely to discuss ways to support the Afghan people, including assistance with humanitarian aid and reconstruction.

It remains to be seen what concrete steps will be taken as a result of the meeting in New Delhi. However, it is clear that the global community is united in its desire to help Afghanistan move towards a peaceful and stable future.

The disappearing wetlands of India

These water bodies are falling prey to real estate mafia on the one hand and becoming dumping ground for waste on the other.

The presence of wetlands in India is recorded as late as 1972.

Antonisamy (Conservation & Management of Freshwater Ecosystems) in 1977, the report showed that there were 7,57,060 wetlands in India and many of these wetlands were not officially recognized.

In 2017, the State of the World’s Wetlands report showed that the number of wetlands in India had declined to 7,20,000.

In 2017, the Government of India, through the Ministry of Environment, Forest and Climate Change, reported that 2,00,000 wetlands had disappeared in the last one decade.

The report also stated that the water bodies in India are facing a crisis of water availability and water quality.

Iran to allow new memory cards in UN's nuclear site cameras

The IAEA told member states in its confidential quarterly report last week that a verification and monitoring activity has been "seriously undermined" since February because of Iran’s refusal to allow inspections of its facilities.

The announcement by Mohammad Elhami of the Islamic Republic of Iran that it had installed new memory cards into its surveillance cameras at the Taromesh nuclear site came at the very time Iran was trying to pressure the IAEA to accept the cards without inspection, a source close to the agency said.

Iranian state media said that the installation of the new memory cards was part of an international effort to help resolve the agency's equipment issues. The agency's equipment is reportedly experiencing delays due to the amount of uranium it produces in Iran, which has led to a shortage of memory cards for the surveillance cameras. The agency has been working with Iran to resolve this issue, but Iran's refusal to allow inspections of its facilities has complicated matters.

Iran's refusal to allow inspections stems from its desire to protect its sensitive facilities from potential inspection by the IAEA, which it views as a tool of Western sanctions. The agency has been under pressure from some countries to inspect its facilities, but Iran has refused to comply. The agency has been working to find a solution to the equipment issue, but Iran's refusal to allow inspections continues to be a sticking point.

The IAEA's announcement comes as the world watches Iran's nuclear program closely. The agency has been monitoring Iran's activities since the 2015 nuclear deal, but the deal's collapse in 2018 has led to increased tensions between Iran and the international community. The agency has been working to maintain the inspection regime, but Iran's refusal to cooperate has made this difficult.

The IAEA's announcement highlights the challenges the agency faces in its efforts to verify and monitor Iran's nuclear activities. The agency has been working to find a solution to the equipment issue, but Iran's refusal to allow inspections continues to be a key obstacle. The agency's ability to maintain the inspection regime will be a crucial factor in determining the future of the nuclear deal and the broader relationship between Iran and the international community.

When the lockdown was imposed in March last year, the poor and the destitute had to bear the brunt of the crisis. Many of them were not able to get work, and those who did were not paid adequate wages. They had to bear the brunt of viral infection and its consequences. It is estimated that at least 12 million people died in the country. Many did not even have food to eat. The ALLPAN study showed that the mortality rate was higher among the poor and the destitute.

The government has taken several measures to mitigate the impact of the lockdown. However, the impact of the lockdown is still visible in the country. Many people are still struggling to make ends meet. The poverty rate has increased significantly. The government needs to take urgent steps to help the poor and the destitute.
