The pivot?

Pawar has given the Congress a leg up by underlining its importance in Oppan space.

He should not dwell too much on his credentials as a national leader or even a native of the BJP's opposition bastion. If he did not hit it at the outset that no one opposes the Congress, then the nation does not believe in India's political correctness. It is as if he gave the Congress the reprise from fellow BJP party leaders that it was desperately needed. It augurs well for the opposition and its curious proclivity that individual issues may that influence the future course of action of the anti-BJP constituencies.

For one, he envisaged no interest in becoming the chairperson of the United Progressive Alliance (UPA), a position held by Sonia Gandhi since the UPA's formation in 2004. He is ready to "cooperate, support and strengthen" any attempt to provide an alternative to the Congress, something that the situation demands. His party has been spearheading this movement, paying for two years now, and the rule of democratic reforms in the strong regional states, the Congress is the only party that "has a pan-India presence." A common test for admission into Central Universities might just now seem appealing, but it could heavily impact learning in the long run

It seems undeniable that the National Education Policy (NEP) (2020), which was released by the Ministry of Human Resource Development, is the most important policy in recent times. The NEP was introduced in 2020 and it aims to redefine the education system in India. One of the main goals of the NEP is to provide a more inclusive and accessible education system for all students. The policy focuses on a shift from rote learning to a more student-centered approach to education.

One of the key areas of focus in the NEP is the introduction of a common entrance test for admission into Central Universities. The policy aims to provide a fair and transparent system for admission into Central Universities, thereby reducing the burden on students and their families. The test would be conducted by the National Testing Agency (NTA) and would be available online.

The NEP also introduces a new grading system, known as the Cumulative Grading System (CGS), which replaces the traditional pass/fail system. The CGS aims to provide a more relevant and meaningful assessment of student performance. The policy also places a strong emphasis on experiential learning and encourages the integration of technology in the classroom.

However, there are concerns about the impact of the NEP on education in India. Critics argue that the NEP places too much emphasis on technology and experiential learning, which can be challenging for students in rural areas or those who do not have access to the necessary resources. There are also concerns about the effectiveness of the new grading system, which some argue does not accurately reflect a student's knowledge and skills.

The policy also introduces new, cost-heavy initiatives such as the Indian National Centre for Educational Technology (INECT), which aims to provide high-quality, affordable educational materials to all students. While the INECT has the potential to improve access to education, there are concerns about the sustainability of these initiatives and the potential for them to be funded in the long run.

The NEP also includes provisions for school education and teacher training, which are important areas for improvement in India's education system. The policy aims to provide better training and support for teachers, as well as to ensure that all students have access to quality education.

Overall, the National Education Policy (2020) is a comprehensive and ambitious plan for education in India. While there are concerns about some aspects of the policy, it is clear that the government is committed to improving education in the country and providing a more inclusive and accessible education system for all students.

However, it is important to note that the implementation of the NEP will require significant investment and resources. It is essential that the government and other stakeholders work together to ensure that the policy is implemented effectively and that all students have access to quality education.

In conclusion, the National Education Policy (2020) presents a significant opportunity for education in India, but it is essential that the policy is implemented effectively and that all students have access to quality education. The government and other stakeholders must work together to ensure that the policy is successful and that it leads to a more inclusive and accessible education system for all students.
The Sri Lanka crisis and economic collapse are a wake-up call for the world. The international community must take decisive action to prevent similar crises in the future.

The crisis in the making was the result of decades of mismanagement, corruption, and lack of accountability. The government failed to address the country's economic problems, leading to a severe economic crisis.

The crisis has forced the government to implement austerity measures, which have caused significant hardship for the people. The government has cut spending on social programs and increased taxes, leading to increased poverty and inequality.

The government has also struggled to attract foreign investment and has been unable to repay its debt. The country is now facing a severe debt crisis and is at risk of defaulting on its loans.

The crisis in Sri Lanka is a warning to other countries that they must address their economic problems before it is too late. The international community must work together to find solutions to the crisis and prevent similar crises from occurring in the future.

In conclusion, the Sri Lanka crisis is a wake-up call for the world. The international community must take decisive action to prevent similar crises in the future and help the people of Sri Lanka overcome their current economic crisis.
Drug shortages persist in Russia after start of war

Utterly shocked and devoid of any words, Elizaveta Glinka could only stare at her sister as she lay dying in a hospital bed in Kharkiv, Ukraine.

Glinka, a 30-year-old nurse, was among the first to arrive on the scene when Russian forces entered the city on Sunday. She had rushed to help the wounded, only to find that the hospital was swamped with victims of the attack.

"I saw bodies everywhere," Glinka said in an interview with The Associated Press. "It was like a war zone."

With hospitals in the region overwhelmed by casualties, many patients have been treated at makeshift clinics set up in parks and squares. But as the war rages on, supplies are running low, and medical workers say they are struggling to keep up with the demand.

In a city that had never faced a conflict on its doorstep, the availability of even basic medications has become a primary concern. "We don't have any medicines," said a nurse at a makeshift clinic in Kharkiv. "We are dependent on what comes from Moscow, and that's not happening."
