India, a developed nation

In 1-D speech, PM talked about five pledges. Can people honour these pledges, but can politicians too?

It's the 76th Independence Day. It's the day India got freedom from British rule. It's the day India became a sovereign independent nation.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Independence Day speech is important for spelling out the vision of the government, especially in this year amid the pandemic. He has outlined five key areas to build a better India.

He has spoken about various initiatives and measures taken by the government during the last few years to transform India into a developed nation. He has highlighted the achievements and progress made in various sectors like infrastructure, education, healthcare, agriculture, and technology.

However, the question remains whether these pledges can be fulfilled and whether the government can deliver on its promises.

India's development agenda aligns with the country's vision of becoming a $5 trillion economy by 2027, improving the standard of living for its citizens, and ensuring inclusive growth.

The Prime Minister has emphasized the need for a strong and vibrant private sector, the role of entrepreneurship, and the importance of innovation and technology.

He has called for a more inclusive and equitable society, where all citizens have access to opportunities and can realize their full potential.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Independence Day speech is an opportunity for the government to set the tone for its policies and actions in the coming years. It is a call to action for all Indians to work together for a brighter and better future for the country.

As we celebrate Independence Day, let us reflect on the progress made and the challenges that lie ahead. Together, let us build a stronger India, a united India, and a prosperous India.
Serving fertiliser subsidy in its true sense

The Government should stop routing subsidies through mainstream banks and give these benefits to farmers.

UTTAM GUPTA

The real intent of the PFR is to reduce government expenditure on fertiliser subsidies. A study by the Independent Group of Experts on Fertiliser Policy, appointed by the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, in 2011, showed that the Indian government spent around Rs 2.1 lakh crore on fertiliser subsidies in 2004-05. In 2018-19, the expenditure on fertiliser subsidies was Rs 1.7 lakh crore.

The PFR aims to reduce the fiscal burden on the government by shifting the responsibility for fertiliser subsidies from the government to the farmers. The idea is to make farmers pay for the fertiliser they use by pricing it at the market rate. The government will then give subsidies to farmers to offset the cost of fertiliser.

However, this approach has several drawbacks. Firstly, it will lead to an increase in the cost of fertiliser, which will likely result in higher crop prices. Secondly, it will increase the burden on small and marginal farmers who are already struggling to make ends meet. Thirdly, it will reduce the government’s ability to control the fertiliser market, which could lead to speculation and hoarding.

The Government should instead focus on improving the efficiency of the fertiliser supply chain and ensuring that subsidised fertiliser reaches the right farmers. This can be achieved by strengthening the public distribution system, improving the logistics and distribution systems, and ensuring that the fertiliser is of high quality.

In conclusion, the PFR is a flawed approach to fertiliser subsidies. The government should instead focus on improving the efficiency of the fertiliser supply chain and ensuring that subsidised fertiliser reaches the right farmers. This will help to reduce the fiscal burden on the government and ensure that farmers have access to quality fertiliser at affordable prices.
