Bihar liquor law comes under SC scanner

The Supreme Court on Monday adjourned the hearing of a petition seeking directions to the ruling party not to grant liquor licences to new vendors. The plea, filed by a few individuals, including former Mongal Group chairman Kumar Sethi, contended that granting licences would lead to a rise in crime and corruption.

"This is all about the enforcement of the Act. The Act has been filed before the Supreme Court of India. If this Act cannot be enforced or cannot be done, then the Act is not worth it," the lawyer said.

The bench was hearing another case involving the same Act and the validity of the Act and the State Government.

India has once again requested the world body for a comprehensive agreement against terror as it doesn’t even have a common definition for a terrorist.

Way back in 1986, India had proposed a draft document on the comprehensive conceptual framework international terrorism of the UN but it hasn’t been implemented because of lack of unity of definition on the UN level.

In September 1999, the world body had requested the UN member states to sign a protocol against terrorism, which India had signed. But India didn’t turn this document into any international treaty.

The subsidies food subsidy contain

The subsidy currently covers 800 million and is meant for the poor. Heavily subsidised food is for the very poor. How can 2/3 of Indians be very poor?

The budget, however, proposes to do away with the MSP, which some experts feel is not the right way to go.

The writer is conflict expert

In this Budget, the government has proposed to do away with the Minimum Support Price (MSP) system, which is the basis of the food subsidy scheme. The government has justified this move by saying that it is not sustainable and has led to high public expenditure. However, experts have pointed out that abolishing the MSP would lead to higher prices for farmers, who rely on it for their livelihood.

The government has proposed to replace the MSP system with a new scheme called the Minimum Price Support (MPS) scheme. Under this scheme, farmers will be paid a fixed price for their crops, which will be determined by the government and will be based on the cost of production and the surplus available in the market.

Experts have raised concerns about the efficacy of the new scheme. They argue that the fixed price may not accurately reflect the market price, and that farmers may face difficulties in selling their crops at the fixed price.

The government has also proposed to create a National Food Security Board to monitor the functioning of the food subsidy scheme. The board will be responsible for ensuring that the food subsidy is targeted at the poor and that it is not misused.

Despite these proposals, many experts have expressed reservations about the government’s approach to the food subsidy scheme. They argue that abolishing the MSP would lead to higher prices for farmers and that the new scheme may not be effective in providing food security to the poor.

In the meantime, the government has announced a number of measures to improve the functioning of the food subsidy scheme. These include the introduction of a new card-based system for the distribution of food grains, which will replace the existing system of open market sales. The government has also announced plans to increase the coverage of the scheme to include more poor households.

The government has also proposed to introduce a new scheme called the Pradhan Mantri Annamandal Yojana (PMAY) to provide food for the poor. Under this scheme, the government will provide food to 200 million poor households at a cost of Rs 10,000 crore per year.

Experts have also raised concerns about the government’s approach to the food subsidy scheme. They argue that abolishing the MSP would lead to higher prices for farmers and that the new scheme may not be effective in providing food security to the poor. They also point out that the new scheme may not be able to reach the poor, who are often the most vulnerable to food scarcity.

They also point out that the new scheme may not be able to reach the poor, who are often the most vulnerable to food scarcity.

In the meantime, the government has announced a number of measures to improve the functioning of the food subsidy scheme. These include the introduction of a new card-based system for the distribution of food grains, which will replace the existing system of open market sales. The government has also announced plans to increase the coverage of the scheme to include more poor households.

The government has also proposed to introduce a new scheme called the Pradhan Mantri Annamandal Yojana (PMAY) to provide food for the poor. Under this scheme, the government will provide food to 200 million poor households at a cost of Rs 10,000 crore per year.

Experts have also raised concerns about the government’s approach to the food subsidy scheme. They argue that abolishing the MSP would lead to higher prices for farmers and that the new scheme may not be effective in providing food security to the poor. They also point out that the new scheme may not be able to reach the poor, who are often the most vulnerable to food scarcity.

Kremlin signals more talks with West amid Ukraine tensions

Despite a dire warning from the West that NATO won’t allow Ukraine to join, President Vladimir Putin on Monday told his Russian top diplomat to conduct dialogue on limits for missile launches and military drills, suggesting the Kremlin is open to negotiations.

But the West has expressed doubts about Putin’s sincerity, noting that Washington has offered to discuss limits on missiles and military deployments on a case-by-case basis, a signal that the Kremlin is serious about avoiding further sanctions.

“President Putin on Monday to Moscow’s Kremlin that it intends to continue diplomatic efforts to resolve the situation,” the Kremlin said.

The statement was made in response to the visit of US Secretary of State Antony Blinken to the region on Sunday.

The Kremlin also offered a lifeline to the West, adding that the US and EU should consider continuing talks with Moscow, which has massed well over 130,000 troops near its borders and, in some cases, is in the process of invading Ukraine.

The US and EU have been pressuring Putin to de-escalate tensions, but the Kremlin has refused to budge, stating that it needs more time to consider the West’s demands.

In a surprise move, Putin said Russia would consider international arbitration to resolve the crisis, which has raised fears of a full-scale war. The Kremlin also said it would consider a US offer to conduct dialogue on limits for missile launches and military drills, but added that the West should also agree to similar limits.

The US and EU have been skeptical of Putin’s intentions, with Blinken saying that the West is open to negotiations, but not at the cost of Ukraine.

On Parkland vigil, Biden urges gun control

Outraged by the massacre in Parkland, President Joe Biden said in a statement that the US had to do more to prevent gun violence.

“This is an obscene rate of violence in our schools that we have to address with a new generation of leaders,” Biden said.

“Four years after 17 students were gunned down at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School, we have to do more,” he added.

Biden also called for an end to the ease of access to firearms, particularly “ghost guns,” home-made firearms that lack serial numbers used to trace them and made firearms that lack serial numbers.

“Gun violence at schools has only gotten worse. Students in Parkland a new generation of leaders, but so far we haven’t done enough to protect them,” Biden said.

Biden’s statement echoed a call from gun safety group Everytown for Gun Safety.

Biden said that his administration would take a series of actions to reduce gun violence, including new laws to provide funding for school safety and mental health programs.

Biden also called for more gun control measures, including universal background checks, a ban on assault weapons, and stricter gun laws.

Preserving is a smart move

A newborn is a fragile newborn; a child, however, must be resilient. In the roles of parent, professional, and educator, nurturing people’s healthy growth and development is one of the most important tasks we face. If children have a problem and one or two causes are known, you can’t just say, “Ah, it’s normal. You should just get used to it.” What should be stressed is: How can we make it a little easier, more comfortable, or safer to grow up, develop, and explore the world? How can we safeguard the physical, mental, and emotional health of the young? How can we help the young learn what it means to be alive and capable of living? How can we help them understand and learn from their environment, their personal circumstances, their society, and the world around them? How can we help them make decisions and form values in a healthy way? How can we guide them towards a healthy growth, positive attitude, and productive life? In short, how can we help them live a healthy, secure, and meaningful life?

A child needs a healthy, secure, and meaningful life. Their health is determined by the environment in which they live, the family, and society. The family is the first place where children learn what it means to love, to care for others, to respect others, to share, to help others, to control emotion, to make choices, and to form values. The society is the environment where children live and interact with others. Children need to learn how to understand others, how to communicate with others, how to handle relationships, how to deal with conflicts, how to make choices, how to form values, and how to adapt to the society. At the same time, children need to learn about the society, about its laws, its values, its norms, its customs, and its behavior patterns. They need to learn how to understand the world, how to adapt to it, and how to make choices. Children need to learn about the world, about its growth, its development, and its culture. They need to learn about the world, about its growth, its development, and its culture. They need to learn about the world, about its growth, its development, and its culture.

Over 70 per cent of the adolescents in the 18 age bracket have received their first dose of Covid vaccine and 17 per cent have received their second dose. This has been achieved by the Government's CoWIN portal, a total of 6,916,859,000 adolescents of the age group have been administered.

Let’s talk about it

In spite of Covid turning our mental health, social health, and social media, sex is still a taboo topic. Doctors JASHEREE SUNDER tells us about it.

Sexual and Reproductive Health Awareness Day is to raise awareness about the importance of sexual health (SRH). SRH encompasses dimensions of health, health-related behaviors, and social well-being in relation to sexual and reproductive health. It recognizes that sexual and reproductive health events can contribute to the development of health and social problems, and that the promotion of healthy lifestyles, including healthy sexual behaviors, can contribute to the prevention and control of these problems.

Sexual and reproductive health events are a major source of health problems and social problems, and they are also major contributors to the development of health problems and social problems. Therefore, it is important to promote healthy sexual behaviors and prevent the development of health problems and social problems.

Eye strain and convergence insufficiency in children

Children particularly take less precautions as compared to adults, therefore they experience convergence insufficiency more commonly than adults do. This leads to the following problems:

- Myopic progression
- Near vision-induced astigmatism
- Difference in the eye appearance
- Headache
- Routine eye fatigue
- Decrease in visual function

Therefore, at the slightest doubt, one should consult a neurologist, and should not over-treat the patient. A neurologist is the only person who can diagnose and treat the condition properly. This is an important point to remember. In the early days, this condition was not diagnosed properly because the patient was not aware of the symptoms. As the years passed, the condition was diagnosed properly because the patient was aware of the symptoms. This is the main reason why the condition is not diagnosed properly. The patient is not aware of the symptoms. Therefore, it is extremely important that these children be examined by a neurologist.
