India's jab drive Completes 1 year over 156 cr doses administered so far

The World Bank Global Economic Forecast says for the first time that India is expected to have lower per capita income than Indonesia and China by 2025. It is the first time in 23 years the World Bank has predicted a lower per capita income for India than China. The World Bank said that the median per capita income in India is likely to be lower than in China by 2025 due to slower growth in India compared to China. The report said that India's per capita income is expected to grow at an annual rate of 4.7% over the next 15 years, while China's per capita income is expected to grow at an annual rate of 5.1% over the same period. The report also said that India's per capita income is expected to be lower than China's per capita income by 2025 due to slower growth in India compared to China.

3 days after police action
Normalcy not yet restored in Dhinakia

Three days after the police action against the anti-government movement in Dhinakia—during the SWF project area near here, normalcy in the village is yet to return.

Two to three kms from the village, a few farm plots and fields, and the village itself are still under the shadow of the police action.

Twenty-two people, including children and women, were still missing in the region. Three of the injured are being treated in the Agartala District Headquarters Hospital in Agartala, and the State Home and Medical College in Agartala in critical condition.

Israel to roll out Covid vak for children below 5 years in April

UNI S JERUSALEM

Israel is expected to start giving children under five years of age a dose of the Pfizer vaccine this week as part of the country’s broader vaccination program. The move comes as the country grapples with a growing number of infections among children, with the latest data showing that more than 30% of new cases in the past week were in children under five.

The decision to vaccinate young children was based on data from other countries that have already started giving vaccines to this age group, including the United States, the European Union, and several countries in Asia and Latin America. The decision was also influenced by the fact that children under five are at higher risk of hospitalization and severe illness from COVID-19.

The vaccine is expected to be administered in a single dose, starting at the age of five months, and will be given in two subsequent doses, six months apart. The government has also decided to extend the vaccination program to all children under six, including those who are six months to one year old.

The decision was praised by health officials, who noted that it will help to reduce the spread of the virus and protect vulnerable populations. It also comes amid a growing concern over the emergence of new variants of the virus, particularly the omicron variant, which is spreading rapidly across the world.

UNI S WASHINGTON

Several countries have seen a significant increase in theft and burglary rates over the past year, according to a new report from the FBI. The report, which was released earlier this month, found that there were over 9.8 million reported thefts in 2021, a 43% increase from the previous year.

The report also found that thefts and burglaries were up significantly in several major cities, including New York, Los Angeles, and Chicago. The FBI attributed the increase to a combination of factors, including the COVID-19 pandemic, which led to a decrease in police officers and other security personnel.

The report also highlighted the need for law enforcement agencies to prioritize the prevention of theft and burglary, as well as the need for increased coordination and collaboration between agencies to address the issue.

A new study has found that the omicron variant is significantly less effective at protecting against COVID-19 than the Delta variant. The study, which was conducted in South Africa, found that omicron was able to evade the immune response of individuals who had previously been vaccinated.

The findings, which were published in the journal Nature, suggest that the omicron variant may pose a significant threat to the effectiveness of vaccines, particularly in regions where vaccine coverage is low.

The study also found that omicron is able to evade the immune response of individuals who had previously been infected with COVID-19. This suggests that the variant may be able to evade the immune system of many individuals, even those who have been vaccinated.

A reflection of self

An honest person must empower himself with the unflinching hope that better times will follow, says Shashi Babcock, an NRI

I

The beginning of 2021 holds no promises for a global return to normalcy. The battle against the Covid-19 pandemic is far from over. The daily numbers of infections and deaths continue to be worrying.

The onset of the pandemic has not only disrupted the daily lives of people around the world but has also had a significant impact on the global economy. The global GDP is estimated to have contracted by 4.3% in 2020, the sharpest decline since the Great Depression.

The pandemic has also had a profound impact on the environment. The lockdowns and reduced economic activity have led to a sharp decrease in greenhouse gas emissions. In particular, the reduction in air travel has led to a drop in carbon emissions from aviation.

In the wake of the pandemic, there is a growing recognition of the need for a greener and more sustainable future. The Paris Agreement, which aims to limit global warming to well below 2°C above pre-industrial levels, is seen as more urgent than ever.

The pandemic has also accelerated the adoption of renewable energy technologies. The International Energy Agency (IEA) estimates that renewable energy investment reached a record high of $286 billion in 2020, up 29% from 2019.

In India, the government has set a target of 450 GW of renewable energy capacity by 2030. The country is also aiming to achieve net-zero emissions by 2070.

The pandemic has also highlighted the importance of digital technology. Telemedicine, online education, and remote work have become more prevalent.

In conclusion, the pandemic has brought about significant changes in the way we live and work. While the challenges are immense, the opportunities for a greener and more sustainable future are also abundant.
