Putin’s unending war

The strikes on the port city of Odessa have dashed the UN-brokered deal aimed at easing global food shortages Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky has rightly called the strikes on the port city of Odessa on Saturday the “end” of the UN-brokered deal that was intended to ease global food shortages by recommissioning grain exports from the Black Sea region. Typically, the Kremlin has insisted in prevarication, claiming that the target was military infrastructure. Unwittingly Secretary General Antonio Guterres looks further diminished. As it is, the world body has lost its raison d’être. When Russian President Vladimir Putin declared his intent to end the war, brutal needless war against the hapless Ukrainians, Guterres made a fervent but feebly appeal to Putin, “President Putin, in the name of humanity, bring your troops to table. We need a deal to help Ukraine.” Putin’s response to the UN chief was brusque, baleful and offered a “beacon of hope.” The hope has been dashed—with withering 24 hours of the signing of the deal, Russia had already commenced attacks.

The attacks by Russia are not only against the Ukraine but also against the UN and its role in the peaceful resolution of international conflicts. The UN has been a significant player in the world’s political landscape, and its role in mediating and resolving conflicts is crucial.

The UN has played a vital role in maintaining peace and stability in the world. Its prestige is paramount, not only among nations but also among the citizens of the world. The UN is the only organization that can bring together nations from all over the world to resolve disputes through peaceful means and to work towards a common goal.

The UN is a symbol of the international community’s commitment to peace and security. It is the only forum where nations can come together to address global challenges, such as climate change, poverty, and conflict. The UN is a platform for nations to work together to achieve common goals.

The UN is a powerful force for good in the world, and its role is critical to maintaining peace and stability. It is a symbol of the international community’s commitment to working together for the betterment of all.

On 3 July 2015, the UN Security Council adopted Resolution 2117, which called for a nationwide ceasefire in Syria and the withdrawal of foreign forces and mercenaries. The ceasefire was meant to pave the way for political talks and a transition in the country. The resolution was supported by 13 countries and opposed by Russia, which cast a veto to prevent it from being adopted.

Syria has been at the center of a complex and protracted conflict since 2011, with numerous parties involved. The conflict has led to the displacement of millions of people and has had a profound impact on the region. The resolution was a significant step towards a political solution to the conflict, but it was not implemented.

The situation in Syria is a reminder of the importance of the UN’s role in maintaining peace and stability in the world. The UN must continue to work towards a peaceful resolution of the conflict and to protect the rights of the Syrian people.

The UN’s role in maintaining peace and stability is crucial, and its work must continue. The world must support the UN in its efforts to achieve a peaceful resolution of conflicts and to protect the rights of all people.

D enocratic politics is perhaps the antithesis of dynastic politics. While a dynastic polity is one where the heir apparent is selected and ordained to succeed the ruler, democratic politics is a system where political power is vested in the people. Democratic politics is one where the power is derived from the consent of the governed and not from tradition or lineage. Democratic politics is a system where the ruler is elected by the people and not by birthright.

In the Indian context, dynastic politics refers to the practice of passing on political power from one family member to another. Dynastic politics is a system where political power is passed on from one generation to the next, usually within the same family. This system is often characterized by the idea that family members are born to rule, and that political power is a natural right of the family.

Dynastic politics is a system that is often associated with nepotism and cronyism, as family members are often appointed to high-ranking positions in government, regardless of their qualifications or abilities. This can lead to a lack of accountability and transparency in government, as the interests of the family are prioritized over the needs of the people.

In contrast, democratic politics is a system where political power is vested in the people. This system is characterized by the idea that political power is derived from the consent of the governed and not from tradition or lineage. Democratic politics is a system where the ruler is elected by the people and not by birthright.

In the Indian context, democratic politics is one where the political power is derived from the consent of the governed, and not from tradition or lineage. Democratic politics is a system where political power is vested in the people, and not in a single family or group of families.

Dynastic politics is often characterized by the idea that political power is a natural right of the family, while democratic politics is a system where political power is derived from the consent of the governed. These two systems are often in opposition, as they represent different ideas about how political power should be distributed in society.

LAVROV SAYS RUSSIAN GOAL TO OUST UKRAINE'S PRESIDENT

by Anthony J. Zinni

Russia appears to have reversed Russia's decision to withdraw from the war in Ukraine. This week, Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov announced that Russia will continue to live together, we will not become the eternal enemy of Russia. We will not let this happen. We will not become the eternal enemy of Russia.

The announcement comes amid ongoing exchanges between Russia and Ukraine over the fate of the country's people. Russia has sought to ensure that Ukraine "becomes the eternal enemy of Russia." In response, Ukraine has called Russia's claims "absurd" and "unfounded."

The United Nations has condemned the Russian military campaign in Ukraine, which has been described as a "war of aggression" by many countries in the international community. The war in Ukraine has resulted in over 100,000 deaths, including civilians and military personnel, and has displaced millions of people across the region.

Meanwhile, in Moscow, Russian President Vladimir Putin has announced plans to increase spending on military equipment and personnel, and has ordered the mobilization of 300,000 reserve soldiers. The move follows President Putin's recent declaration that the war in Ukraine was a "special military operation," designed to "liberate" the region from "the yoke of nazism and bolshevism."
BANGKOK: Myanmar’s junta announced late Monday it had carried out its first coup in nearly 50 years, bringing a former military general to power. The coup is the latest in a series of coups and reversals of democracy in and around the Southeast Asian region.

"The junta said the coup was to protect the “national unity and stability” of the country, according to a statement from the junta’s Committee for National Unity and Stability," AP reports.

"We are shocked and saddened by this news," AP quotes Myanmar’s former President Thein Sein as saying.

"We are deeply concerned about the implications of this action for regional stability and peace," he added.

"We urge all concerned parties to work towards resolving the current crisis through dialogue and peaceful means."
