The discovery of a rare fossil egg has been made in Madhya Pradesh, India, by researchers at the University of Manchester in the UK. The egg is the first of its kind to be found in the region and is thought to be from an extinct species of dinosaur. The egg was found in a lagerstätte, a highly fossiliferous deposit, that was left behind when the region was submerged by the sea in the late Triassic period. The researchers believe that the egg may belong to a species of theropod dinosaur, such as a theropod carnivore or a theropod herbivore. The discovery is significant because it provides new insights into the biology and behavior of these extinct species. The researchers are currently working to determine the exact species and age of the egg, as well as the circumstances under which it was fossilized.

Fresh snow in Antarctica contained microplastics, another grim reminder of climate changing play havoc

In a sad and first-of-its-kind development, microplastics — much smaller than a grain of rice — were found last week in fresh snowfall samples from 19 sites across the Ross Island region of Antarctica. The findings, published in the Cryosphere journal, revealed that an average of 29 microplastic particles per litre of melted snow were present in the snow. This figure is much higher than marine concentrations reported previously from the surrounding Ross Sea and in Antarctica sea. Antarctica, the southernmost continent and site of the South Pole, is a virtually untouched, ice-covered landscape, just a bit like certain scientific seabed, including the McMurdo Station which is the largest station in Antarctica, the density of microplastics was nearly three times higher than normal glacier debris. The researchers detected 13 different types of plastic — the most common being PET, i.e., commonly used to make soft drink bottles and clothing. Amazingly, and alarmingly, atmospheric modeling suggested that these microplastics could have travelled thousands of kilometres over an ocean before reaching Antarctica. According to the study, microplastics may further affect climate by acting as cloud ice or snow in the atmosphere and by absorbing and radiating infrared to the Earth’s surface in the same region. Although the authors don’t know if this is an unexpected global circulation pattern, it might be a natural cycle. Some believe that this is a bigger problem for the microplastics that are floating on the surface of the oceans. More research is needed to understand how this impacts the environment and what can be done to mitigate it.

1942 just took off, and since then, blood banking has become an integral part of medical care in India.

Among the pioneers of blood banking in India were Dr. Homi J. Bhabha and Dr. Narayan D. Desai. Bhabha, a distinguished nuclear physicist, founded the Atomic Energy Research Establishment in 1948, and Desai was the first director of the Indian Council of Medical Research.

The Indian Red Cross Society, established in 1920, played a crucial role in the development of blood banking in India. It was the first organisation in India to collect and store blood.

India is one of the few countries in the world that has a comprehensive blood banking system. The National Blood Transfusion Council, established in 1977, is responsible for coordinating blood banking activities across the country.

Blood banks, both public and private, are distributed throughout the country, and there are more than 2,500 blood banks and 400 blood collection centres.

In recent years, there has been a significant increase in the awareness and understanding of blood donation. This has been partly due to the efforts of organisations like the Indian Red Cross Society, and partly due to the government’s efforts to promote blood donation.

The Indian government has launched several campaigns to encourage blood donation, including the World Blood Donor Day campaign, which is celebrated every year on June 14.

In 2018, the government launched the National Blood Donation Policy, which aims to increase the number of blood donors by 50% by 2022.

Today, blood donation is considered a patriotic act in India, and the government has made it mandatory for all government employees to donate blood once a year.

In conclusion, blood banking has come a long way in India, and it continues to evolve and improve. With the continued efforts of organisations like the Indian Red Cross Society, and the government’s commitment to promoting blood donation, India is well on its way to becoming a leader in the field of blood banking.

Moscow-backed officials try to solid rule Ukraine

AF PERSPECTIVE

Kiev—Ukrainian officials have raised concerns over the possibility that Moscow may be planning to occupy significant parts of the country, even as the Ukrainian military continues to make gains on the battlefield.

According to reports, Moscow's military has been advancing into the Kherson region, a key gateway to Crimea, and has also been seen reinforcing positions in other areas, including the Donetsk and Luhansk regions.

The Ukrainian government has warned that Moscow may be planning to create a buffer zone in the Kherson region, which could eventually lead to a full-scale invasion of the region.

Meanwhile, the United Nations has called on Russia to respect Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

On the ground, Ukrainian forces have recaptured several key cities, including the city of Kherson, which was previously occupied by Russian forces. The Ukrainian military has also been successful in eliminating several Russian military bases and denying Moscow control over strategic points.

Despite these gains, however, the situation remains tense, and continued efforts are needed to ensure a peaceful resolution to the conflict.

HAALAND ‘PROUD’ TO MAKE MAN CITY MOVE

LIVERPOOL agree 75m-euro deal for Haaland

LEIPZIG, June 14 (Xinhua) — Liverpool FC has agreed to sign Norwegian forward Erling Haaland for 75 million euros ($79 million), the club confirmed in a statement on Tuesday.

The transfer could eventually rise to 100 million euros, including add-ons and a sell-on clause, according to Sky Sports. European clubs had hoped for a deal to be struck by the end of June.

The deal is subject to Haaland passing a medical and agreeing terms, which is expected to be completed within the next 48 hours.

The transfer would make Haaland the most expensive signing in the Premier League and the second-most expensive in world football, only behind Kylian Mbappe’s transfer from Paris Saint-Germain to Real Madrid.

Haaland will sign a six-year contract at Anfield, subject to his medical, and will be unveiled in the coming days.

Former Red Bull Salzburg chief executive Christian Pursch said Haaland’s move to Liverpool “is an obvious move”.

“In my opinion, the only move for him would be to the Premier League,” Pursch said.

The 22-year-old said he was “profoundly excited” to join Liverpool.

“If I had to choose just one goal in my career, it would be to win the Champions League,” Haaland said. “I think we have the right team, the right coach, the right facilities, and the right structure to achieve that.”

Haaland’s move to Liverpool is the latest in a string of transfers that has reshaped the Premier League landscape.

Next up, the club will travel to Manchester United for the second leg of the FA Cup final on Saturday.
