Apart from ousting two office-bearers, the BJP Government must define tensions with the Middle East

The BJP has done the right thing by expelling party official marijuana Saleem Shahr and Nareen Jinda, the media of its Delhi unit, over their controversial remarks about Prophet Muhammad. The Indian Government was also prompt in taking action against these leaders as “firing elements,” something that has been appreciated by Saudi Arabia, the fourth most visited destination by Muslims in the world. Yet, the BJP and other Indian parties and leaders have been silent about the anti-Muslim rhetoric and denunciation of the statements (by Shahr). Earlier on Sunday, K. Chandrasekhar Rao and J. Ajith Reddy had condemned the allegations of傷害 the Prophet’s honor.

Shahr’s comment was a response to the comments of J. A. M. Turell, a prominent Muslim leader and leader of the Democratic Socialists of America, who had alleged that the Prophet’s honor was being violated by mosque boycotts and restrictions on wearing face masks in France. Shahr had said that “the Prophet’s honor is being violated by mosque boycotts and restrictions on wearing face masks in France, and we must do something about it.”

Under the new policy, any Muslim who violates the Prophet’s honor will be punished with imprisonment of up to 5 years and a fine of up to $100,000. The policy also includes a provision for imposing a fine of up to $100,000 on any Muslim who makes abusive statements about the Prophet.

The policy has been criticized by human rights organizations who say it violates the right to freedom of religion and expression. However, the policy has been supported by a majority of Muslims in the country, who say it is necessary to protect the Prophet’s honor.

The government has also announced a $100 million fund to support Muslim communities affected by the policy. The fund will be used to provide financial assistance to Muslims who are arrested under the policy, as well as to support community centers and mosques.

In related news, the Indian government has announced a new policy to ban the wearing of face masks in public places, including mosques. The policy, which is effective immediately, will also ban the use of loudspeakers during namaz (prayers) in mosques.

The government has said that the policy is necessary to prevent the spread of the novel coronavirus, which has claimed over 1.2 million lives in the country. The government has also announced a $1 billion fund to support the healthcare sector, including hospitals and vaccination centers.

Heat waves are termed the ‘silent disaster’ as heat-related deaths are often undercounted around the world for a number of reasons.

In the first installment of the Sixth Assessment Report, the IPCC asserts that human activities have warmed the planet at a rate never seen before in planet’s long history. Heat waves have become more frequent, severe, and long-lasting, with a global temperature of 1.8°C above pre-industrial levels by the late 21st century. Heat waves have also been associated with the destruction of the Arctic and Antarctic ice sheets, leading to an increase in sea levels and oceanic warming.

In the second installment of the Sixth Assessment Report, the IPCC notes that as the planet continues to warm, heat waves will become more intense, prolonged, and unpredictable. The report states that heat waves are likely to be more frequent and severe in the future, with a heat wave occurring in at least one out of every three years by the late 21st century in some areas.

In the third installment of the Sixth Assessment Report, the IPCC notes that heat waves are a significant threat to human health, with the risk of death and injury increasing with each heat wave event. The report states that heat waves are a major public health concern, with more than 700,000 people dying each year from heat-related diseases.

In the fourth installment of the Sixth Assessment Report, the IPCC notes that heat waves are a major threat to food security, with the potential to cause widespread crop failures and food shortages. The report states that heat waves are likely to reduce crop yields and increase food prices, with the potential to cause widespread hunger and malnutrition.

In the fifth installment of the Sixth Assessment Report, the IPCC notes that heat waves are a major threat to the environment, with the potential to cause widespread forest fires, wildlife extinctions, and sea level rise. The report states that heat waves are likely to cause widespread forest fires, with the potential to cause widespread extinction of wildlife and biodiversity.

In the sixth installment of the Sixth Assessment Report, the IPCC notes that heat waves are a major threat to economies, with the potential to cause widespread damage to infrastructure, businesses, and tourism. The report states that heat waves are likely to cause widespread damage to infrastructure, with the potential to cause widespread economic losses.
US, S Korea fire missiles to sea, matching North's launches

Rishi Sunak backs UK PM Boris against all confidence vote

The United States and South Korea fired ballistic missiles into the sea on Sunday as a warning to North Korea, which on Saturday launched three missiles, to show that a single challenge among the recent provocations by both sides would not be withstood. The moves by both sides display a day earlier that the region is a flashpoint for military confrontations.

The U.S.-South Korea military drills follow a series of similar exercises by both sides in recent days. The drills are part of a broader effort by the two allies to respond robustly and accurately to North Korea's nuclear and missile threats.

The exercises are part of a series of joint military drills between the United States and South Korea that began earlier this month. The drills are part of a broader effort by the two allies to respond robustly and accurately to North Korea's nuclear and missile threats.

UK boosts Ukraine support with high-tech missile system

The British government said Monday that the multiple-rocket systems it has offered to Ukraine will bring a "significant boost to the country’s efforts to defend itself." The deployment of the systems, which continues in support of its policy of "pushing back" the Russian military, comes as Ukraine’s security situation continues to deteriorate. In recent weeks, Russian forces have made significant advances in the eastern part of the country, particularly in the region of Luhansk. The move is seen as a key step in the UK's support for Ukraine, which has been under attack from Russia for months. The systems will be deployed in three phases over the next few weeks. They are capable of firing up to 80 kilometers (50 miles) and have a reaction time of 10 minutes. The UK's action is part of a broader international effort to provide Ukraine with the tools it needs to defend itself against Russian aggression. The UK is among the countries that have pledged to provide Ukraine with military aid, including financial support for the war effort. The deployment of the multiple-rocket systems is a significant step in this effort. The UK's action is also seen as a way to demonstrate its commitment to defending NATO allies and upholding the rules-based international order. The move is expected to put additional pressure on Russia, which has been under sanctions from the international community for its invasion of Ukraine. The deployment of the systems is also expected to boost Ukraine's defensive capabilities, allowing it to better defend itself against Russian advances. The UK's action is a positive step in the effort to provide Ukraine with the support it needs to defend itself against Russian aggression.
The RBI's monetary policy meeting: Here's some of expectations

Summary:
- The Reserve Bank of India (RBI) will announce its latest monetary policy on June 8.
- There is optimism among some seasoned market watchers and economists that the RBI will give the market its first rate cut in four years.
- The repo rate, at 6 per cent, last changed in August 2019.
- The central bank has phrased its mandate to maintain monetary stability, which it says it will do “through a combination of monetary and income policies.”
- Economists have cautioned that a rate cut will have limited impact on the economy, especially since the recent ramp-up in inflationary pressures.

Recent Developments:
- The central bank has increased the cash reserve ratio (CRR) to 40 per cent and the statutory liquidity ratio (SLR) to 45 per cent, in an effort to reduce liquidity in the system.
- The central bank was also expected to inject liquidity into the system, but has not done so in recent months.

Key Issues:
- The central bank will have to balance between controlling inflation and supporting growth.
- There is a risk of a rate cut being too little too late, given the recent rise in inflation.
- The central bank will also have to consider the impact of a rate cut on the rupee and foreign exchange reserves.

What to Expect:
- A rate cut of 25 basis points would be the most likely scenario.
- If the central bank does not cut rates, it may consider other measures such as quantitative easing or forward guidance.

Conclusion:
- The central bank will have to make a difficult decision, given the economic and political pressures it faces.
- The central bank’s decision will have a significant impact on the economy and financial markets.
