arican Prime Minister Scott Morrison recently said that China adopted a policy of “anti-access, anti-use” that attempts to frustrate efforts to fight the war in Ukraine, which is one of the persistent risks. The Prime Minister said that China has been using its influence to pressure Russia to stop fighting. China is known for its non-interventionist policy and has maintained its neutrality in the conflict.

The Chinese Prime Minister, Li Keqiang, has also been diplomatic in his comments on the situation, stating that China is committed to promoting peace and stability in the region. He has also emphasized the importance of dialogue and negotiation to resolve conflicts.

India, on the other hand, has expressed its concern over the situation and has urged all parties to pursue peaceful solutions. The Indian government has stated that it is committed to maintaining peace and stability in the region and has called for the resolution of disputes through peaceful means.

Despite the differences in approach, both China and India are aware of the importance of maintaining good bilateral relations. The two countries have a long history of cooperation in various fields, including trade, investment, and security.

In conclusion, while the invasion of Ukraine may impact the relationship between China and India, it is important for both countries to continue to pursue dialogue and cooperation to maintain peace and stability.

The Indian Government's Drift on Gas: Key Insights and Implications

Hindustan Times

T he Indian government has recently announced its plans to increase gas production, a move that could have significant implications for the country's energy sector. Here are some key insights and implications:

1. Increased Gas Production: The government aims to increase gas production by 30% by 2022, with a target of 350 billion cubic meters (BCM) by 2024-25. This is part of a broader strategy to address India's growing energy demands and diversify its energy mix.

2. Strategic Importance: Gas is a strategic fuel for India, offering a cleaner alternative to coal and diesel. Increased gas production could help reduce emissions and improve air quality.

3. Economic Impact: Gas is also crucial for economic growth, with applications ranging from power generation to manufacturing. Increased production could boost these sectors.

4. Cognizance and Awareness: The government's announcement highlights a growing awareness of the importance of gas in India's energy mix. However, the challenge lies in ensuring adequate infrastructure and distribution to capitalize on this growth.

5. Challenges: Despite the potential benefits, India faces several challenges in achieving its gas production targets. These include infrastructure bottlenecks, regulatory hurdles, and coordination between state and central governments.

6. International Relations: India's gas strategy also has implications for its international relations, particularly with countries like Russia and the Middle East, which are major gas suppliers.

The government's commitment to increasing gas production is a significant step towards achieving energy security and sustainability. However, effective implementation and addressing the challenges will be critical for the success of this initiative.

EU slams ‘war crimes’ in Ukraine but new sanctions unlikely

Ukraine's president Volodymyr Zelenskyy, has pledged to try to avoid any involvement with Moscow's military action in neighboring Ukraine, after his country has been rocked by two explosions that reportedly killed dozens of civilians.

But the European Union has so far failed to agree on imposing new sanctions against Russia over the invasion, with some countries resisting tougher measures.

The EU has previously imposed economic sanctions on Russia, targeting its financial system and key industries, but has struggled to agree on more punitive measures.

In recent weeks, there has been growing pressure on the EU to impose more sanctions, with some member states calling for a further escalation.

However, there has been resistance from countries such as Germany and Italy, which have been concerned about the impact of sanctions on their economies.

EU officials have acknowledged that the bloc is struggling to find a consensus on new sanctions.

But they have also emphasized the need for a united approach in response to Russia's invasion.

The EU has already imposed economic sanctions on a number of Russian officials and entities, including the country's central bank and the state-owned gas company Gazprom.

But it has so far been unable to agree on a comprehensive package of measures.

Some member states have called for more robust sanctions, including an embargo on exports to Russia.

But others have argued that such measures could harm the EU's own economy and have urged a more measured approach.

There has also been growing concern in the EU about the impact of the conflict on energy supplies.

With Russia a major supplier of gas to the bloc, some member states have expressed concern about potential shortages.

The EU has been working to diversify its energy sources, with some countries looking to increase imports from the Middle East and North Africa.

But this has been met with resistance from some member states, particularly those with close ties to Russia.

The EU has also been calling on Russia to ease the flow of energy to Europe, with some member states suggesting that the country could face consequences if it fails to comply.

In the meantime, the EU has been working to ensure the stability of energy markets, with some countries calling for increased regulation.

But the bloc has so far been unable to agree on a unified response, with some member states resisting efforts to impose further sanctions.

The EU's struggle to agree on new sanctions highlights the challenges faced by the bloc as it seeks to respond to Russia's invasion of Ukraine.

With the situation rapidly evolving, it remains unclear how the bloc will move forward in the coming weeks and months.
India pursuing bilateral steps for energy: UN chief

The United Nations has launched a new initiative to pursue bilateral steps for energy development, following India's announcement that it will pursue a series of bilateral energy projects with other countries.

The UN has been working with India on energy projects since 2010, and has been encouraging India to pursue bilateral energy projects as a way to address the country's energy security needs.

The initiative was announced during a bilateral meeting between UN Secretary-General António Guterres and Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi.

Guterres said that bilateral energy projects would help India to achieve its goal of becoming a major power in the global energy market.

"India is a major player in the global energy market and we need to work closely with India to ensure that its energy needs are met," Guterres said.

"Bilateral energy projects are a key part of this effort, and we hope to see more of them in the future."
