BJP's choice for RS leaves door open for horse-trading

T N Rathore

A development that has given the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) a major headache is the prospect of Congress dissidents who are likely to contest the Rajya Sabha (RS) poll scene in the states.

The Congress has already announced that its candidates for all 23 RS seats in four states will be decided by its high command.

The BJP, which is in the process of finalising its RS candidates, has been cautious in its choices, given the possibility of horse-trading in the RS.

BJP's strategy

The party is likely to focus on candidates who are loyal to the party and have a strong base in their respective regions.

"We are looking for candidates who are not only loyal to the party but also have a strong base in their constituencies," a BJP leader said.

The party is also likely to consider candidates who have a good track record in public service.

"We are looking for candidates who have a good track record in public service and are known for their integrity," the leader said.

The BJP has also been cautious in choosing candidates who have a strong base in the RS, given the possibility of horse-trading.

"We are looking for candidates who have a strong base in the RS but are not so strong that they can be easily wooed," the leader said.

Even a good 75 years after Independence, the word ‘untouchability’ is bereft of a definition

The good news is that it took the month of the State to facilitate a Dalit family’s entry into a temple in Karnataka’s Shimoga. The usual, as usual, refused entry and met violent entreaties. Finally, a large police contingent entered the village, imposed prohibitory orders and let the family inside. Needless to say, this incident will be re-enacted whenever a family wants to enter the temple. Untouchability at work. Seventy-five years after Independence, a Dalit cannot enter a temple, draw water from a public well, sport a moustache, ride a horse or wear a trouser. Demand for the people who have arrived in the presence of the law, it is probably the only time that untouchability has enjoyed ‘untouchability’. The Untouchability (Offences) Act, 1955, itself does not define the core word.

These days, when intolerance and belief can trigger temple disputes, why not define something tangible like untouchability? In their 1952 judgment, Tanveer Husain Kangri and K. Ramasamy of the Supreme Court said the Constitution does not define ‘untouchability’ because it is ‘not capable of precise definition’. Describing it as a struggle between ‘Hindus and the Untouchables’, they said: ‘It is an intangible, eternal and unchangeable and lasts for as long as the untouchable has placed you at the lowest of the society is eternal. No change according to time and circumstance can end untouchability. For fifty-five years earlier, a G. R. Ays of the Karnataka High Court said it should be noted the word ‘untouchability’ occurs only in Article 17 of the Constitution and is ‘encluded in inverted commas’. He said the framers of Article 17 are not considered untouchability in its literal or grammatical sense but the practice as it had developed historically in this country’. The law to abolish untouchability, the untouchability of a definition, would appear to be deliberate as the intention presumably was to leave no room for scope or the continuity of the practice for any shape or form. Does that mean untouchability is dead because it stands along, listed and unredemptioned? But is it not also true that ‘untouchables’ were for a long time a symbol of untouchably welfare measures to them? Can we define and call the other one?

Nepal is a remarkable scene of unrecorded achievements on its mountains but course correction is missing

In an eerie reminder of a crash that occurred on May 12, 2014, a plane flying from Pokhara to Jomsom crashed near the Jomsom airport, killing 16 people. Ten died in the same plane and on the same route, another aircraft hit a mountain, cratered, and engulfed 22 lives. The 2014 flight was operated by Air Saar, Nepal’s domestic airline, flying a Dornier Do-28 plane. This time, it was a turboprop Twin Otter 97 aircraft belonging to Tara Air. The airline came into business in 2009 to help develop rural Nepal, and claiming to be the “newest and biggest” airline service provider in the Nepalese mountains. However, air tragedies are nothing new in Nepal’s treacherous terrain. There are frequent and inquiry commissions are set up after each accident but hardly any tough steps are taken for course correction. For one, all the aircraft in service are old planes, some of which being a second-hand. Another reason is the lack of modern navigational and technical facilities to aid the pilots and the ATR Traffic Controller during inclement weather, which is rather frequent and unpredictable phenomenon in any mountainous area.

The airlines, in their desire to make a quick buck, most to understand tactics like hiring semi-qualified or even completely unqualified pilots, often fly home to get the world’s highest 14 mountains, including Everest, has an unrecorded record of air accidents in the last 20 years. This, of course, is a plane of the same airline flying on the same route. The airline is the Air Saar passengers, of the first flight from Kathmandu, a plane of the same airline flying on the same route. The airline is the Air Saar passengers, of the first flight from Kathmandu, which crashed four days earlier in Jomsom, killed 22 people on board, including four Indians, flying on a popular tourist route went missing in the mountains of Nepal last Sunday. The aircraft, on a 15-minute flight from Jomsom to Kathmandu, both popular destinations for foreigners who seek mountain tours as well as Indian and Nepalese Hindu devotees who visit the revered Muktinath temple, last contact with the AOI, shortly after take-off. The crash took place at Thangthangku in Mustang district at a height of 14,500 feet.

How Biden, cops and advocates foraged on police, race

Jim Pasco, the executive director for the Fraternal Order of Police, was watching football on a Sunday afternoon when he got a call from the White House.

"The police policy advisor at the White House wanted to talk," Pasco said as he looked back at that pitchy white and red-checkered page that he was using to take down the meeting notes from his talk with the Biden administration.

Pasco said that the officer he spoke with told him that the White House wanted a little feedback about what police departments are doing to address police brutality and systemic racism.

"The officer was trying to get our feedback on what police departments were doing to address police brutality and systemic racism," Pasco said.

Pasco said that he was pleased with the feedback that he was able to provide and that he was happy to continue to work with the White House to address police brutality and systemic racism.

As China seeks big Pacific deal, many in Fiji see benefits

PM BENJAMIN NETANYAHU

Fiji, the tiny South Pacific islands nation, is on the brink of a historic trade deal with China, which is seeking to expand its influence in the region.

The negotiations, which have been under way for several months, are expected to result in a treaty that would allow China to invest in Fiji’s infrastructure, including roads, ports, and telecoms.

China is already Fiji’s largest trading partner, with trade between the two nations in excess of $1 billion a year.

Fiji Prime Minister Frank Bainimarama has said that the deal would bring much-needed economic growth to the island nation.

"We are very excited about the potential of this agreement," Bainimarama said. "It will provide us with the opportunity to attract much-needed investment and create jobs for our people.

"We are confident that this agreement will be beneficial to both China and Fiji."

However, some Fijian opposition politicians have expressed concerns about the deal, saying that it could be a step towards China establishing a military presence in Fiji.

"We have been vocal about our concerns," said opposition leader Sitiveni Rabuka. "We believe that China is using Fiji as a springboard to expand its influence in the region and we are not willing to be used in this way.

"We are calling for a thorough review of this agreement before it is signed."

A sixth package was announced on May 4, but the European Union bloc wanted to ensure that the fund will be used exclusively for the security of Germany and Europe increasing," Scholz added.

"It is the right answer to the turning point that started with Russia's attack on Ukraine," he said at a trade fair in Hanover, news agency DPA reported. "The talk on the issue is becoming more intense, with the two sides reaching an agreement Friday night that shows the way to bring the fund to parliament. Among other things, funding for cybersecurity and support for partner countries will come from Germany's regular budget, not the special fund, as some had feared," Scholz said.

Slovakia has long lagged in its defense spending, with the country having reached a deal to move ahead with a big hike in defense spending. "The German government is set to raise its defense spending by 5% this year and 7% next year," Scholz said.

The report said the reduction in stressed assets has been accompanied by a collection efficiency mark of 65% compared to 40% in the previous quarter. NPAs have improved from 17.5% to 16.6% and a strong correlation has been witnessed between collection efficiency and loan quality.

Overall, the report said, the NPAs of NBFC-MFIs have declined due to changes in provisioning and write-off norms. The newly revised provisions as of 30 June 2022 also reflect a more prudent provisioning approach.

"It is important that the banks continue to monitor the NPAs closely and make changes in provisioning norms to remain prudent," the report said.

In the backdrop of rising inflation and rate hikes, the report said the banks need to ensure that they align their lending rates with market rates.

"The report said, in this context, the banks need to align their lending rates with the benchmark rates."
Monza promoted to Serie A for 1st time
Saint-Étienne relegated from Ligue 1

Monza will face the top five sides of Serie A from the last 10 years. The team has advanced from the third flight to Serie A after the activity of the second flight of the championship. However, the team will face tough competition in Serie A, where teams such as Juventus, Inter Milan, and AC Milan are considered strong.
