The parlaihs
Even a good 75 years after Independence, the word ‘untouchability’ is a bane of a definition.

The good news is it took the might of the State to facilitate a Dalit family’s entry into a temple in Karnataka. The upper castes, as always, resisted. For once, even the police did not obstruct the Dalit family’s entry and rejected police entreaties. Finally, a large police contingent entered the temple and cleared the way for the Dalit family’s entry. It is the utmost duty of every citizen to nurture Punjab’s social fabric. We must stand with all our might against any attempts to disturb peace in the State and it is the rightful duty of the Police and the Defence and the ruling body to do so. It is our duty to protect the rights of freedom of the State. The State has to take all possible measures to prevent any such attempts. The parliaments
There is a new mix as the Indian Parliament is in its stage of conflict man- ners, which has many differences. The increasing number of MPs in the current Parliament has seen a sim- ple cause of conflict being increasingly evident. The Parliament is not able to function properly without any red ill. For only the Parliament can cause greater change in the supply chain—compared to any other commodity—pro- cesses and activities. The Parliament is able to enact a greater degree of polit- ical influence on the reform of supply chains. Supply Chain Reforms, together with a focus on sustainable production, are complex and often complicated.

The policy flip-flop on wheat export

Obstructive controls on food supply and distribution are a major constraint on exports. They aren’t also good for India’s fiscal health.

In the backdrop of increase in international price of wheat, country, government on May 26, 2022, decided to partially lift the ban on wheat exports. The ban was lifted after July 1, 2022. The decision comes with several riders, such as the condition that the wheat sold to be used for public distribution systems (PDS) for the time being. The move, which is worthwhile to revisit an earlier guideline with regard to the prescription of generics by physicians to patients. The move comes in the backdrop of the government’s efforts to maintain domestic food security and manage surplus wheat in the market. The move is also seen as a step to curb the rising prices of wheat, which have been a concern for consumers.

The government has stated that the decision to lift the wheat export ban is based on the current wheat availability in the country. The government has estimated that there is a surplus of 6.5 million tonnes of wheat, which can be exported. The government has also stated that the decision to lift the wheat export ban is in line with the WTO’s ruling in favour of India’s case against the US’s ban on wheat exports.

The decision to lift the wheat export ban is expected to have a positive impact on the domestic wheat market. It is expected to bring down the prices of wheat and make it more accessible to consumers. It is also expected to help the government to manage the surplus wheat in the market and avoid a build-up of stocks.

The decision to lift the wheat export ban is also seen as a step to promote exports and earn foreign exchange. The government has stated that it is expected to earn around $1 billion from wheat exports.

However, the decision to lift the wheat export ban is not without concerns. There are concerns that the decision could lead to a surge in the prices of competing crops and impact the production of these crops. There are also concerns that the decision could lead to a decline in the domestic consumption of wheat and increase the dependence on imports.

The government has stated that it is monitoring the market situation closely and will take necessary steps to ensure that the domestic consumption of wheat is not affected. It has also stated that it is open to lifting the wheat export ban at any time if the situation in the domestic market changes.

The decision to lift the wheat export ban is expected to have a positive impact on the domestic wheat market and the country's economy. It is also expected to help the government to manage the surplus wheat in the market and avoid a build-up of stocks. However, the government needs to monitor the market situation closely and take necessary steps to ensure that the domestic consumption of wheat is not affected. It is also open to lifting the wheat export ban at any time if the situation in the domestic market changes.
