Nikah under personal law not exempt from POCSO Act: HC

The Supreme Court of India has ruled that nikah, the Islamic marriage ceremony, is not exempt from the POCSO Act (Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act).

The Court was hearing a case regarding a minor girl who was allegedly raped by her husband. The petitioner had claimed that since the ceremony was performed according to the principles of Sharia law, it was not covered under the POCSO Act.

The Court rejected this argument, stating that the POCSO Act applies to all children irrespective of their religion or the ceremony through which the marriage was solemnized.

The Court noted that the POCSO Act was designed to protect children from sexual offences, and that it covered all children, regardless of their religious background.

The Court also clarified that the POCSO Act is applicable to all children, regardless of their religion, and that it is not limited to any particular community or religion.

The Court further added that the POCSO Act is intended to protect all children, regardless of their religious beliefs or practices.

The Court concluded that the POCSO Act is applicable to all children, regardless of their religion, and that it is not limited to any particular community or religion.

The Court ordered that the petitioner should approach the appropriate authority to file a complaint under the POCSO Act.

The Court also directed the petitioner to furnish all necessary documents and evidence to support the claim.

The Court emphasized that the POCSO Act is intended to protect all children, regardless of their religion, and that it is not limited to any particular community or religion.

The Court thus ruled that nikah, the Islamic marriage ceremony, is not exempt from the POCSO Act.

Ukraine urges civilians to leave liberated areas for winter

Russia's Ukraine war is entering a critical phase as the country gears up for winter, with authorities urging civilians to leave liberating areas in preparation for the cold months ahead.

The government has asked for international assistance to help with the situation, particularly in the northeastern Kharkiv region, where civilians have been trapped by Russian forces for weeks.
