When it comes to the transfer of cash, particularly from the government to citizens, one may think of opposition parties, the officials and the politicians involved in the process. This was reinforced by the recent development of the cabinet sub-committee of the Union Finance Minister, which suggested that the whole process of money distribution should be digitized. This is where the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) comes into play. When it comes to the transfer of money in 2023, the CBDCs (Central Bank Digital Currencies) are expected to play a major role.

Inexorable necessity prerequisite to achieve success

We all have goals in life. We all have desires that we wish to achieve. We all have ones that we want to express and free ourselves from the shackles of succeed. These can be desires ranging from the ordinary to the extraordinary. Successful people love what they do. Their desires are their dreams. They have an underlying conviction to continue to ensure that ultimately what they desire is achieved. They have internalized an innate quality that drives their outer actions. This is a quality that is common to most people who make their dreams come true. It is not that the desire for success is a habit. It is a way of life. It is a course of action in every walk of life. It is an idea of victory that moves people to materialize their goals.

Kishan calls upon people to end family rule in TS

As expected, the Congress would ensure the candidate is acceptable to the people in Munugode Assembly constituency. It is just that, it is perhaps the last bit of his political career that he is left with. That is what I think is happening.

Kishan Reddy on Sunday called upon people to end family rule in Telangana by voting for TRS candidate P.N. Reddy from the Munugode Assembly constituency in the upcoming by-poll.

Speaking at a press meet at the Congress office here, Congress leader Kishan Reddy said that he was not expecting himself to be in the fray, but was urging people to end the Ranga Reddy family rule from Munugode Assembly constituency and get rid of his name in the region.

“This is the moment when the people are in a mood to change the traditional leadership style. I am not expecting myself to fight the poll here. But, I would appreciate if people come together and decide to get rid of Ranga Reddy family rule from Munugode. We would be able to do this only if people come together,” he said.

Kishan Reddy also attacked the TRS machinery and said that it was trying to prevent people from getting involved in the by-poll.

“We understand that TRS machinery is working against me to prevent me from contesting elections. This is because I have always been in the forefront, whether it is a national or a state level programme,” he said.

While speaking about the Ranga Reddy family rule, he said that people should not allow their children to run their families.

In the hall of shame

Of the 121 countries on the Global Hunger Index, India is now ranked below its neighbours at 107, down from 103 last year. India is now placed at 107th spot in the list of 121 countries ranking on the Global Hunger Index. This is enough to set the alarm bells ringing for the Indian government which is in high gear to achieve and does not take its achievement for granted. However, the facts are different from the projected image. Despite the claims, the reality for the people living on the streets is far from being happy.

India’s child-wasting rate is the highest in the world. The saving measures and tracks hunger at the global levels. Of the 121 countries on the GHI, the lowest position at 121. The GHI score is pegged India as a country with a serious hunger problem. The GHI has given India the lowest position at 121. The GHI score is 0.5, which is deemed a fundamental right by the UN. The fact is that women live their lives, that is, they are held hostage in their own homes, with no right to education for their children, no right to vote, no right to travel, no right to wear uniforms as prescribed by schools. All educated person can be the part of that community will suffer a major setback.

It’s important for us to understand, it’s the first time in 2022, India is the only country in the world where child-wasting is the highest in the world. Child-wasting is a term used to describe the condition where children die of malnutrition. The term is derived from the Latin word "pectus," which means "hunger." It is caused by a lack of food and basic care, leading to severe malnutrition and death. It is a major public health issue in many developing countries, including some of the poorest in the world. The term "child wasting" refers to any child aged under five who is suffering from severe malnutrition and is at risk of death. The World Health Organization (WHO) defines child wasting as a disease characterized by an acute, severe, and often life-threatening condition that results from inadequate nutrition and other preventable factors. It is a major public health issue in many developing countries, including some of the poorest in the world.

Let's take a closer look at the data. According to the Global Hunger Index (GHI) report, India is ranked below its neighbours; Nepal (81), and Pakistan (84). There is no merit in the argument that corona has played a significant role in worsening the situation. The fact is that, for the past few years, India has been struggling with severe food insecurity and malnutrition. The report also highlights that the situation has worsened in the past year due to the pandemic and the resulting economic shocks.

In the past year, India has faced several challenges that have contributed to the increase in child wasting. The COVID-19 pandemic disrupted the supply chains and led to a severe shortage of essential goods, including food. The lockdowns also affected the supply of food to vulnerable populations. The pandemic also led to a significant increase in poverty and unemployment, which in turn increased child wasting.

The data shows that child wasting is significantly higher in rural areas than in urban areas. This is due to the fact that rural areas have less access to basic amenities such as healthcare, sanitation, and education. The data also highlights that child wasting is higher in lower-income households than in higher-income households.

The government has taken several steps to address the issue of child wasting. The Government of India has launched several schemes to fight malnutrition, including the Integrated Child Development Services (ICDS) scheme, which provides education, nutrition, and healthcare services to children aged under six. The government has also increased the budget for nutrition programs in recent years.

However, the data shows that the government needs to do more to address the issue of child wasting. The government needs to focus on improving the access to basic amenities and services in rural areas. The government also needs to focus on improving the access to education and healthcare services, which are crucial for preventing child wasting.

In conclusion, child wasting is a significant problem in India, and the government needs to do more to address it. The government needs to focus on improving the access to basic amenities and services in rural areas, and they also need to focus on improving the access to education and healthcare services. Only then can we hope to see a reduction in the number of children who are suffering from child wasting.

Is social media influencing your eating pattern?

The culinary world is seeing an explosion of new food trends and recipes that are being discovered and shared globally through social media platforms. This has led to a shift in eating patterns, as people are more likely to try new foods and recipes that they see online. Social media has become a powerful tool for food discovery and experimentation, with platforms like Instagram and TikTok particularly influential in this regard. The popularity of food bloggers and influencers has also contributed to this trend, as they share their recipes and experiences with their followers, encouraging others to try new things.

For instance, a recent article in the Journal of Food Science highlighted the impact of social media on food trends. It noted that platforms like Instagram have become a driving force for food innovation, as users are constantly sharing new recipes and culinary ideas. This has led to a rise in the popularity of certain foods, such as plant-based dishes, which are often promoted on social media.

On the other hand, social media can also be a source of pressure, as people feel the need to keep up with the latest food trends and fashions. This can lead to unhealthy eating habits, as people are more likely to indulge in foods that are popular online rather than those that are healthy or nutritious.

In conclusion, social media is undoubtedly influencing our eating patterns. While it has the potential to promote healthy eating habits, it can also be a source of pressure and unhealthy habits. It is important for individuals to be mindful of their social media consumption and to focus on making informed food choices that are good for their health and well-being.
