Global applause for Uttarakhand Rescuers
Rat hole miners make India proud

A man was rescued from a 12-meter-deep rat hole in India on Thursday, becoming the 27th person to be pulled out of the collapsed tunnel in Uttarakhand after a mechanical drill broke down.

The rescue effort, which lasted for 13 days, involved international tunneling experts and demonstrated the country's capabilities in handling such challenging rescue operations.

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi congratulated the rescue team for their heroic efforts. "These brave men and women worked tirelessly to save the lives of those trapped in the tunnel," he said. "India is proud of you all!"

The rescue operation was a testament to the country's resolve and determination to overcome challenges and save lives. It has received widespread praise and applause from around the world.

India's focus on infrastructure development and investment in technology has been highlighted by this success story, showcasing the nation's ability to handle complex rescue missions.

The rescue of the last miner, on the evening of November 30, marked the end of a grueling operation that saw the Indian government and international experts working tirelessly to save as many lives as possible.

"The rescue operation was a remarkable feat of human perseverance and skills," said Dr. Sanjay Rastogi, an expert on tunneling and rescue operations. "It is a testament to India's capacity to handle such challenges, especially in a remote and inaccessible area like the one we are dealing with.

"I am extremely proud of every individual who took part in this operation, from the brave miners who worked inside the tunnel to the many support teams who worked on the surface," he added.

The rescue of the 12th miner also signaled the end of a month-long operation where rescue efforts were prioritized over machinery, as the tunnel collapsed due to a mechanical fault.

This operation, which involved the coordination of multiple organizations and agencies, is a credit to the resilience and dedication of the Indian people. The rescue of the last miner marked the beginning of a new chapter in India's rescue and recovery efforts.

India's national pride was further enhanced by the rescue operation, which was carried out with the help of international experts and equipment. The rescue efforts involved the use of international tunneling technology, which demonstrated India's commitment to modernization and development.

The success rate of rescue missions in the Silkyara shows how coordinated efforts and a compassionate approach can achieve the impossible.

Mission impossible!

To inset the pipes in the final stages through which all the trapped workers were pulled up, it took 47 hours of continuous work. The rescue workers toiled in brutal heat, under intense pressure, and were faced with the daunting task of removing the workers trapped inside the tunnel. This task required the utmost coordination, expertise, and unwavering determination.

At the end of the tunnel (T), the rescue workers successfully extracted the workers, bringing the rescue mission to a successful conclusion. The workers were transported to safety, and the tunnel was declared clear of obstructions.

India’s G20 Presidency: Towards a better future

Today marks 365 days since India assumed the G20 Presidency. Let us reflect, reconnect, and rejuvenate the spirit of ‘Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam’

As we understand the responsibilities that come with India’s G20 Presidency, the year marks a momentous time for the world’s largest democracy. Through “In Bhagavad Gita” (the ‘Gita’ participants’ engagement), G20 is an assembly of states, committed to broader development aims, and a forum for dialogue. Consequently, when India assumed the G20 presidency, there was a clear-cut crossing across action-oriented initiatives, including health, education, gender equality and sustainable livelihoods.

A G20 Action Plan to Act on Climate in the next 5 years has been launched, and in laying out a roadmap for the world on climate change, the spirit of ‘Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam’ is rekindled. India’s G20 presidency aims to create urgent, lasting, and concrete solutions, and its commitments focus on the following:

1. Climate Change: India aims to double the renewable energy capacity by 2030 and achieve net-zero carbon emissions by 2070.
2. Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs): India aims to achieve all the 17 UN SDGs by 2030, focusing on poverty eradication, health, education, and gender equality.
3. Global Health: India plans to increase funding for global health research and promote access to essential medicines.
4. Multilateralism: India seeks to strengthen multilateral institutions and promote cooperation for global challenges.
5. Gender Equality: India aims to achieve gender parity in education and employment.

India’s G20 presidency has focused on leveraging the country’s rich cultural heritage and sustainable development initiatives. The G20 has been a platform for India to showcase its commitment to sustainable development, and India has used this forum to share its experiences and best practices with other nations.
