Sanchi India’s first solar city

DESPON, KANPUR, INDIA

Sanchi, the architectural marvel that witnessed the birth of Buddhism, will now illuminate the modern age with solar power. The Madhya Pradesh government recently announced plans to convert the ancient city into the country’s first solar city. The initiative aims to harness the power of solar energy to meet the city’s electricity demands and promote sustainable living.

The initiative is part of the larger vision to make India a solar power superpower, with the government setting a target of installing 450 GW of solar capacity by 2030. Sanchi’s solar city project is expected to not only contribute to this national goal but also serve as a model for other historical sites across the country.

The famous Buddhist stupa of Mahabodhi Temple in Bihar’s Gaya district will now be illuminated by solar power. The stupa, originally built by the Mauryan Emperor Ashoka, is considered a significant religious site and a UNESCO World Heritage site. The plan to light up the stupa with solar power is expected to not only enhance the site’s visibility but also reduce its environmental impact.

The stupa, located in the heart of the Mahabodhi complex, is a focal point for Buddhist pilgrims from around the world. By converting the iconic site to solar lighting, the authorities aim to make it more accessible and attractive to visitors while minimizing its carbon footprint.

Russia's Central Election Commission said on Monday that judging from early results, the ruling party won the most votes in occupied Ukrainian regions, as Kyiv and Moscow seek to buttress their cooperation in the face of US-led sanctions.

The vote holds as a test of both countries' attempts to tighten their cooperation for the past three years amid the conflict in eastern Ukraine.

Based on data collated by the commission, the United Russia party won the most votes in four regions of the Donbas, eastern Ukraine, according to the commission.

It has sparked Western concerns that Moscow and Beijing may seek to deepen their cooperation in the face of US-led sanctions.

Attempts to hold the vote in areas controlled by separatists have been thwarted by the conflict and the vote's legitimacy has been questioned.

Novak Djokovic defeated Daniil Medvedev 6-3, 7-6 (7-5), 6-3 to win his fourth US Open and a record-equalling 24th Grand Slam title, completing a remarkable comeback from a Covid-19 diagnosis.

Djokovic admitted to feeling "a little bit tired" after his victory but said he would "try to replicate that quality of playing" in his next match.

"It's not easy to repeat," he said. "It's not that easy to play like this day in, day out."

Djokovic's achievement has not only cemented his status as one of the greatest tennis players of all time but also set a new benchmark for longevity in the sport.

"It's not easy to repeat," he said. "If I wanted to win the 25th Grand Slam title, I would have to try to replicate that quality of playing."

But Djokovic believes he still has the potential to do so, especially after his performance in this year's US Open.

"I think I can still play at a high level in the next few years," he said. "It's not easy to say how many years, but I want to keep going?

"I want to keep going. I want to win until the end of my career."

Djokovic's victory was particularly significant given the challenges he has faced in recent years, including his loss in the 2019 US Open final and his absence from the 2020 tournament due to a positive Covid-19 test.

But his triumphant return to the US Open, and his subsequent victory over Medvedev, has solidified his status as one of the greatest tennis players in history.
