The Rio de Janeiro state legislature passed a bill that would make it easier for employees to take maternity leave. The bill, authored by Brazilian lawmaker Adriana Costa, would allow pregnant women to take up to 12 months of unpaid leave, instead of the current eight months. The bill also includes provisions for fathers to take up to six weeks of paid leave per year.

Brazil has one of the highest maternal mortality rates in the world, and many women struggle to balance work and family responsibilities. Costa said she hopes the new law will help reduce that burden and give parents more time to bond with their newborns.

The bill now goes to the president of the state government for approval. If signed into law, it will apply to all employees in Rio de Janeiro state, including public and private sector workers.

Costa’s proposal is part of a broader effort in Brazil to improve women’s rights and gender equality. In recent years, the country has implemented policies to increase access to prenatal care and reduce gender-based violence.

However, many Brazilian women still face significant barriers to accessing these services, particularly in rural and remote areas. Costa hopes that the new maternity leave law will be a step forward in addressing these challenges.

The bill has received support from various groups, including labor unions, women’s rights organizations, and some politicians. However, others have expressed concerns about the cost of implementing the new rules on employers, especially small businesses.

Costa is optimistic that the bill will eventually become law. She has already submitted a similar proposal at the national level, aiming to expand the benefits to all Brazilian workers.
Southern comfort

The BJP must win seats in south India to reach the desired strength in the Lok Sabha

The ever-changing political climate often demands course correction and compels politicians to reconsider their positions. For the BJP, the challenge is amplified by the fact that the party has been intensifying its efforts to expand its footprint beyond traditional strongholds in the Hindi belt. To this end, the party has been focusing on states like Tamil Nadu and Kerala, where they have never won, and their efforts in the south are not just about a tactical strategy. TheBJP’s southern foray is aimed at changing the party’s overall strategy, turning it into a broad national movement.

Historically, Tamil Nadu has been dominated by the Dravidian parties, primarily the AIADMK and the DMK. However, the BJP’s recent foray has significantly entrenched itself in the political landscape of Tamil Nadu and Kerala. Moreover, the diverse nature of these states, characterized by their rich culture and traditions, presents unique challenges and opportunities for the party to gain a foothold.

For instance, the state of Tamil Nadu, known for its rich cultural heritage, is a hub for artistic and intellectual pursuits. The presence of prominent universities and institutions further enhances the state’s appeal. The BJP’s strategy in Tamil Nadu appears to be multifaceted, focusing on strengthening its base through local elections and building a strong following among the state’s educated and economically advanced population.

In contrast, Kerala, with its strong communist and Marxist influence, presents a different challenge. The BJP, however, has been actively engaging with the people of the state, working towards building alliances and reaching out to a broader section of society.

In conclusion, the BJP’s foray into the southern states is a strategic move aimed at expanding its influence and presence beyond traditional strongholds. The party’s focus on these states reflects a broader strategy of reaching out to diverse demographics and establishing a strong regional presence. By doing so, the BJP is not only challenging the dominance of Dravidian parties but also carving its own path towards becoming a national party with widespread appeal. Ultimately, the BJP’s southern campaign reflects a clear and calculated approach towards expanding its footprint and strengthening its position in the political landscape of the south.

US Treasury Secretary Yellen raises concerns over China’s trade practices

KUMARASWAMY’s BANDEA

Arukshina is back on the Western side with several high-profile visits to Asia and from the country. This week US Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen, who heads the Group of 20 (G20) Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors Meeting (Committee of Governors) in Indonesia, has several scheduled talks with officials of the Group of 20 countries. G20 is the forum for the world’s major economies, and it is a key platform for discussion on global economic and financial issues. In recent years, the G20 has taken steps to address global economic challenges, including the COVID-19 pandemic, climate change, and inequality.

Yellen’s visit to Indonesia is significant given the strategic importance of the region for the US and its efforts to strengthen economic ties with Asian countries. In addition to discussing trade issues, Yellen is expected to address topics such as financial stability, climate change, and digital currency.

On Monday, Yellen held a meeting with Indonesian President Joko Widodo, who recently announced a series of economic reforms aimed at boosting growth and attracting foreign investment. The two leaders discussed a range of issues, including infrastructure development, renewable energy, and digital economy.

On Tuesday, Yellen participated in a panel discussion at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland. She highlighted the importance of multilateralism and cooperation in addressing global challenges, and emphasized the need for continued support for vulnerable countries.

On Wednesday, she met with the leaders of the European Union, including European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen, to discuss trade issues, climate change, and the ongoing crisis in Ukraine.

On Thursday, Yellen is scheduled to meet with Chinese officials to discuss trade tensions between the US and China. The US and China have been engaged in a ongoing trade war since 2018, with both countries imposing tariffs on each other’s goods.

Yellen’s visit to Indonesia highlights the US’s efforts to strengthen economic ties in the region and address global economic challenges. She is expected to continue her engagements with officials in Indonesia and around the world, with a focus on issues such as trade, financial stability, and climate change.
Lufthansa, which usually flies five flights per week from Frankfurt to Tehran, suspended all flights on Thursday, saying it had received a notification from the German government that it would not be able to fly to or from Iran due to the current situation in the Middle East.

On Thursday, March 9, 2023, and four days in a row, the top German airline Lufthansa announced that it would temporarily suspend all flights to and from Tehran due to the Middle East crisis. The airline said it had received a notification from the German government that it would not be able to fly to or from Iran due to the current situation in the Middle East.

Lufthansa, which usually flies five flights per week from Frankfurt to Tehran, suspended all flights on Thursday, saying it had received a notification from the German government that it would not be able to fly to or from Iran due to the current situation in the Middle East. This came as Israeli airstrikes in Gaza killed three sons of Hamas leader Ismail Hanifeh.

Israel's six-month war against Palestinian militants in the Hamas-ruled territories began six months ago, with Israel's foreign minister saying that the Palestinian factions were not reaching peace talks. Israel had halted aid deliveries to Gaza in 2018, and the Hamas-led government was not able to gain access to the territory.
After Modi’s remarks, China says “sound and stable ties” serve the common interests of China and India

President Xi Jinping had Thursday reiterated that “sound and stable ties” serve the common interests of China and India as the two major countries. In Beijing, the Chinese president’s remarks followed those by Prime Minister Narendra Modi of India, who had declared during a joint news conference with his Chinese counterpart that “there is nothing to fear” between the two nations, while also warning that borders should be addressed.

In an interview with Newsweek, which was published last week, Mr. Modi said that for India, the relationship with China is important and significant. “It is my belief that we need to address the underlying concerns of instability and ambiguity in our bilateral relations to ensure that the relationship between India and China remains sound and stable,” he said.

New Delhi has deployed a number of measures to create an impression that borders remain under control, including the deployment of several thousand soldiers on the eastern border that has been a point of contention for years. In recent weeks, the Chinese government has signaled an intent to cool down recent border tensions.

The ties between China and India are complicated, and both countries have a vested interest in keeping the border atmosphere healthy to avoid any untoward situations that might disrupt bilateral relations. Both countries areoe playing a friendly and stable China-India relation that is an important part of India’s foreign policy.

But the互联互通 ties serve the common interests of China and India. The two sides are in close communication on diplomatic and military issues.

“We hope India will work in the same spirit with China. We will handle the bilateral relations from the perspective of the two peoples and develop a stable and secure Sino-Indian relationship.”

However, it is important to note that despite China’s efforts, there is a growing concern in India over the situation on the border. India has accused China of changing the status quo on the border region, and has said that it will take all necessary steps to ensure its national security.

Meanwhile, in Pakistan, there has been a growing concern over the situation on the border with India. Pakistan has accused India of violating the Line of Control, and has said that it will take all necessary steps to ensure its national security.

The situation on the border is a complex one, and it is important for both countries to engage in diplomatic efforts to resolve the issue amicably. It is important to note that the two countries have a long history of cooperation, and it is important to maintain this cooperation in the future.

The ties between China and India are important for the region and the world. The two countries have a long history of cooperation, and it is important to maintain this cooperation in the future.

With a menu that has seen minimal changes over decades, eschewing cutlery in favour of a hands-on dining experience, Bukhara at ITC Maurya boasts a cult following among both foreign tourists and local patrons, says Pawan Soni.

Bukhara, the iconic restaurant at ITC Maurya, New Delhi, recently celebrated 65 years of success, and I had the privilege of interviewing the visionary. As I immersed myself in the celebration, one question lingered on my mind: Is Bukhara truly the most iconic restaurant in India?

And undoubtedly claims this title when considering factors like its illustrious list of state head restaurants and its perennially bustling ambiance that doesn’t even entertain reservations. With a menu that has seen minimal changes over four and a half decades, eschewing cutlery in favour of a hands-on dining experience, Bukhara boasts a cult following among both foreign tourists and local patrons. What truly astonishes me is Bukhara’s enduring success despite unconventionalism. Despite its somewhat Spartan setting and amidst a sea of North Indian and North-West Frontier eateries in the city, Bukhara maintains its allure with a unique blend of tradition and sophistication.

Inside Bukhara’s glass façade, state-of-the-art kitchens produce a diverse portfolio of dishes that have remained constant for decades. The chefs at Bukhara are known for their passion and dedication to crafting traditional recipes with a modern twist.

However, on further inquiry, one question lasted in my mind. What is it that has made Bukhara one of the most iconic restaurants in India?

As I delved deeper into the history of Bukhara, I discovered that the restaurant was founded by Chef JP Singh in 1957. Under his leadership, Bukhara has become a household name in the culinary world, attracting both locals and tourists from across the globe.

Despite its humble beginnings, Bukhara has maintained its standards over the years, offering a menu that is a testament to the evolution of traditional Indian cuisine. The restaurant’s mild and spicy dishes, such as the famous Dal Bukhara, have been a favorite among food enthusiasts for decades.

What truly astonishes me is Bukhara’s ability to remain relevant in an ever-changing culinary landscape. The restaurant’s commitment to preserving traditional cooking techniques and using the freshest ingredients has ensured that its menu remains a signature in its own right, crafted with utmost care and consistency.

As I enjoyed a meal at Bukhara, I couldn’t help but reflect on the restaurant’s impact on Indian cuisine. The chefs and staff have not only maintained the restaurant’s standards but have also continued to innovate, creating new dishes that pay homage to the rich history of Indian cooking.

In conclusion, Bukhara’s enduring success is a testament to the restaurant’s commitment to tradition, innovation, and culinary excellence. It is a true icon of Indian cuisine, and I am grateful to have experienced its timeless charm.

Gurugram’s ever stretching frontiers

Stand alone restaurants in the the Delhi NCR region are carving out a unique niche for themselves, says KARAN PURI

The project features a sprawling glass façade, state-of-the-art infrastructure, and a wide range of facilities that cater to the diverse needs of businesses. MRM FIC is strategically positioned on Golf Course Extension Road, making it easily accessible from various parts of the city and its surrounding areas. It boasts of having leading restaurants like漫hush, Air Bar, Relish Bistro, Soul Barcelona, Social office, One 8 Commons, Managers, Ambience, China Garden and several more. However, on the marketing front, there is a hardly any effort being put in by the project developers to create buzz. No catchy name, no catchy tagline, no catchy story that puts the ones on standalone buildings in the same league of something out of the ordinary in order to tap the types of business companies.

A few new well-established, branded restaurants have popped up recently and some more are on the pipeline. One that really stands out is Gharri’s, a unique restaurant offering a range of global fusion cuisine. However, despite the efforts of Mr Hitesh Chaddha, the project’s brainchild, Mr Hitesh Chaddha, it is the grind’s own initiative in fine dining.

The experience of customising flavours to suit the taste of the guest and also offering a plethora of options is a remarkable feat for a 130-seat restaurant focusing primarily on high-end cuisine.
