Southern comfort

The BJP must win seats in south India to reach the desired strength in the Lok Sabha

The even-numbered actions so often demands course correction and compels politicians to think pragmatically. However, the BJP has been interfering its efforts to expand footprint beyond traditional stronghold in the heartland. As political parties advise the BJP to register wins in the north and northeast and stand down south. Prime Minister Narendra Modi’s south-centric push is becoming increasingly pronounced, with keen focus on States like Tamil Nadu and Kerala, where the party has never won a BJP’s southern forces is not an impact but a crucial strategy. Traditionally, the southern states have been dominated by regional parties with strong linguistic and cultural identities, presenting formidable challenge to national parties like the BJP. However, the BJP has been prudent enough to adopt its approach to resonate with the aspirations of the southern electorate. One of the key ingredients of Tamil Nadu, Kerala, and Andhra Pradesh is cultural sympathy.

Historically, Tamil Nadu has been dominated by the Dravidian parties, primarily the AIADMK and the DMK, that fight on cultural and political dynamics, with the BJP making inroads and attempting to extend its political influence. A key approach has been instrumental in bolstering the BJP’s prospects in Tamil Nadu. Inaugurating infrastructure projects to addressing public rallies, Modi has been actively engaging with the people of Tamil Nadu. The party is set to head for a significant impact in the state. It is a question of political ambition and strategy.

Bukhara, the iconic restaurant at ITC Maurya, New Delhi, recently celebrated 45 years of success, and I had the privilege of revisiting the waterfront location.
